Those who takey themselves above the vicinitudes which assail the struggles of industry may turn coldly from a theme they believe inapplicable to their case, or, with suspicious instincts aroused, may deprecate all legislative interference which they imagine might remetely jeopardize the rights of the proprietor. The y design may feel, so leign, anxiety at the lity of their farmer-debtors claiming a legal exemption, while, in addition to the obstacle which open hostility, concealed enmity and cold a pothy interpose, the great bulk of our farming population are at present enlisted in the ranks of Anti-Feudalism, and so intent upon freeing themselves from Selgnionial exactions that they may be likened to an army compelled to fight and beat the seemy before it can venture to provide for the future. The farmers of the Eastern Townships, and Upper Canada, have consequently been the first to welcome our advocacy of a principle which, if realized, will elevate them in the social scale, and furnish fresh pledges in fivor of their interested maintenance of legal authority.

We regret to find, not withstanding the progress of tema stove after selling his house over his head—a questionable display of humanity, which invests the victim with the unavoidable companies of seven the destitute; but let us enquire whether some of the urban classes do not carry with the able exemption. Have we not public clargymen, lawyers, dectors, note and agents? The capital which was invested in educating them, and of which they during the legitimate fruits, is beyond the reach of any creditor. It is their exemption, and calculated at a money value, far exceeds even the most liberal scale a wanded to the agriculturists in the United States. There can be no violation of morality or justice in suffering a farmer to record a Homestead mortgage for $500 on his farmthe act is performed publicly and openly the in formation available to any subsequent creditor. It injures no one, but it creates a home feeling and sense of security and happiness, which materially conduces to the well-being of individuals and the safety of society.
