A DOMESTIC SCENE
IN TWO PARTS.
PART I.
TIME, 5 p. m. Enter husband, who produces a small package which he hands to his wife.
Wife—Well, George dear, what does
this package contain?
Husband—Having some business down
Bridge Street this afternoon, I dropped into Knapp Bros' new store to note
the improvements they had been making.
While there they gave me a couple of tea-bags which they desired me to take home to you, at the same time remarking that "they knew you were a thorough judge of good tea." So there it is.
Wife—Well, I am certainly much obliged to them, and shall, indeed, be glad to give it a fair trial. Oh, but such tea as you have been buying lately! I'll tell you, and tell her to keep some for supper. (Exit.)
Bridge—Yes, ma'am.
Wife—Bridge—Here is some tea which I want to have steeped for supper. Now, I tea-pot thoroughly, and do not let it boil. I do so dislike boiled tea.
Bridge—Love me alone for that, ma'am.
Faith and it's meself 'll be mighty glad to give a good cup of 'er. (Smiles the tea.)
Beggins, it smells well, anyhow. (Exit Bridge).
PART II.
(Husband and wife seated at supper
table).
Husband—Well, wife dear, well 'ry
the flavor of the tea.
Wife—I trust it will be as good as represented.
Husband (tasting)—Eureka! Eureka!
Found at last! Just exactly as they told me. The best tea I have tasted for years.
Wife (tasting)—The exact thing! How delicious the flavor is! From this time onward buy your tea at Knapp Bros'.
Husband—So I shall. I shall go at once and order a full supply; and more, I shall call "all my sisters, and my cousins, and my aunts" about it, and drive them to buy no more. (Curtain drops).
