The Gleaner's Daily Fashion Hint

The little coat depicted has been specially designed to adapt itself readily to the cold winds of the moment or to the gladsome airs of Easter, since the quaint little capes, with their gray fur collar, are easily detachable, and would then reveal a flat velvet collar in keeping with the cuffs. The gray fur edging there would likewise have to be removed, and so the big pearly buttons would be the only other additional element on the background of bright, almost grass, green velour cloth. The other two sketches show simple but delightful school frocks of blue serge.

The Missing Bride

(Continued.) Heading after heading he scanned eagerly and systematically, but without perusing any of the paragraphs beneath them. In turn he treated each of the newspapers in similar fashion, but if he was looking for anything special it was not to be found. In the end he tossed the last of them aside with a murmured exclamation equally applicable to relief or disappointment, and having thus given vent to sentiments unknown, he picked up the Sportsman and settled down to a coldly critical study of the leading article on current events in his own particular world—the world of turf. But so dilatory was the crawl of the South-Eastern tortoise that he had finished the Sportsman before the train reached Lewisham. He started out of window at six o'clock and found the streets for a while, and then in disgust at the unlovely view took up his copy of the Daily Telegraph. This time his glances at the paper were neither eager or systematic, but idle and cursory, yet he had not had it in his hands two minutes before his interest was aroused in, and his attention finally riveted on, an item under the double heading—strode to a vacant space at the far end and ordered a liqueur brandy, which he stood sipping in solitary state, neither looking to the right nor left, heedless of the respectful glances of less prominent knights of industry.

But presently a cringing voice at his elbow compelled attention, and, wheeling round, he found himself looking down into the wolfish eyes of Kevin Trask, the drink-sodden journalist. "Just a word, Captain Charlock," came the whilky-laden request. "I take my oath I ain't on the borrow. But I've picked up a bit of news which would interest you, and you are welcome to it for past favors." "Well, what is it?" demanded Charlock curtly. Trask brought his horrible face nearer and lowered his tone. "I heard that Teddy Flushing has done a bunk. He was to have ridden Gaythorpe at Wolverhampton yesterday, and one of the two others, but he didn't turn up on the course. The owners had to find other jockeys at short notice." "Bah!" said Charlock. "That's nothing fresh. It was in all this morning's papers. The lad was ill and stayed at home, I suppose." "Ah, but there's something later not published yet," the wastrel scribbler persisted, his evil gaze searching the other's face. "I have just come from Fleet street and got it from a man on the Lynx. Teddy lives with his mother at Newmarket, as you know, and it seems he was expected home the night before last—the Bellipse Stakes day—but he never arrived. The rumor is that he was expected to be reported to the Sandown stewards for his riding of Persiflage in the Stakes, and that he was afraid to face the music. The lad was ill and stayed at home, I suppose." Charlock laughed contemptuously. "Absolute rot!" he exclaimed. "The boy had nothing to fear from the stewards. If there had been any intention to report him he would have been reported there and then—on the course." "Well, you know best, but that's how they account for his being missing, rejoined Trask, in his moist servile manner. "I thought you would be glad to be informed of the gossip the press will indulge in." He felt in the pocket of his stained and threadbare waistcoat, withdrawing his dirty fingers with an exclamation of dismay. "There," he whined, scowling viciously at the dubious company he had left. "I had a couple of bob, but some one pinched them. One of the boys must have been through me. Could you oblige—"

(To be continued.) Either a man must make a way for himself or get out of the way of others. Five thousand dollars in greenbacks lay for more than 50 years in the garret of Miss Annette Perham's room in Marysville, Calif. The other day Miss Perham hired a tramp to clean out the garret and he found the money.

Washington, March 22.—Patriotic students in the Central High School today tore down from the walls of a class room a picture of Emperor William of Germany and hung in its place a photograph of President Wilson, decorated with two American flags. The Emperor's likeness disappeared before the officers of the school cadet corps had an opportunity to present to Miss Marie Siebert, teacher of German, a resolution protesting against the presence of "a murderer's picture" and demanding its removal. Harry Roper, the 15-year-old son of Daniel C. Roper, recently appointed to the Tariff Commission, led the agitation begun several days ago against the picture by turning its face to the wall several times. Miss Siebert, who is an American citizen, insisted that it should remain, saying that she intended to use it to illustrate a lecture. Then the cadet officers interested themselves and were ready to act today when other students entered the room during a recess and made the substitution. School authorities are investigating the incident.

WATERVILLE, N. B.

Waterville, N. B., March 20.—A very successful supper sale were held on the evening of March 7th at the home of Mrs. Clara Porter. Tea was served to a large crowd and the proceeds amounted to more than $50. Mrs. James Plummer entertained a party of young people very pleasantly at her home Friday evening. Mrs. Will Wilson and daughter, Hilda, of Lakeville, spent the week-end here with friends. The Baptist Women's Missionary Society met at the home of Mrs. John Barrett on the afternoon of March 8th. Mr. and Mrs. Abner De Grasse are visiting friends and relatives in Houlton.

THE CENSOR'S HUMOR.

(Manchester Dispatch.) A soldier recently writing home to his people described how he had been buried alive for a couple of hours in a demolished dug-out, but eventually was extricated by his comrades. He added, by way of consolation: "I had the satisfaction of sending five of the Germans to hell." The censor, in passing the letter, had drawn a line through the sentence, but wrote underneath: "It is not permitted to refer to the whereabouts of the enemy."

Love may be blind, but it's foolish to attempt to work off a paste diamond on a girl under the impression that you have her hypnotized by your good looks.

That Faded Coat of Blue

In fact a faded garment of any variety can be re-dyed and made as good as when first purchased. Do not be discouraged about the clothes you have secured since the beginning of the war. If the manufacturers have used poor color in their goods, we are at hand with the machinery to use only first class dyes and guarantee first class work. DON'T FORGET THE PLACE.
