The "If" Fault.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"If Professor M. had lived," I caught myself thinking the other day, "I might be doing better work. He was always such an inspiration and such a splendid critic. He wouldn't have let me do anything but my best."

The moment I heard that thought I was ashamed of it.

For it was an example of one of the faults I hate the most in the world--the "if" fault.

"If" is one of the most dangerous deluding words in the English language. It's only a tiny bit of a word to be sure, but a skillful person can hide the faults and mistakes and failures of a lifetime behind it.

Don't Pick and Choose Your "Ifs."

The trouble is that we remember some "ifs" and forget others. If I had had a better education, if I had not been handicapped by a weak constitution, if I'd only had more influential friends, if I hadn't been away the time that opportunity came--what a success I could have made, to be sure.

Yes, and if you had had the grit to go to evening school and complete your education, if you had had the self mastery to conquer your weak constitution by strict adherence to the laws of health, if you had had the push that takes the place of pull, if you had been ready the time that other opportunity came--what a success you might have made, to be sure.

Of course there's such a thing as Luck.

Of course there are a great many "ifs" outside of ourselves that affect our lives. There is no use to blink that fact. It makes a good basis for a moral treatise to pretend there is no such thing as luck but the drawback is, it isn't true. Some people do have luck and opportunity and others seem to struggle continually with adverse fates. But there are other "ifs" inside of you and if you're going to talk about one kind, talk about the other, too.

The best way, the most sportsman-like way, to my thinking, is not to talk about either. Live up to the best that is in you and put "If" behind you. He'll find suitable company there.

I hate a card player who can never take a defeat without complaining about his poor hand, and I hate a man or woman, myself not excluded, who is always saying what he would have done if. Remember, it's not necessarily the biggest credit to win in the game of cards or the game of life. The big credit belongs to him who plays square, uses every card he is dealt to its full value, and takes his losses like a sportsman.

Questions and Answers.

On my way to my home a few days ago a woman and two little children attracted my attention. On passing a store that had goods displayed outside the woman walked up close to the stand and picked up an apple. To me it seemed the children knew she intended to do just this as they looked around just as she did it and then looked at each other and seemed pleased. The three were not at all thin or hungry looking. What would you have done?--Letter Friend.

Reply.--Probably nothing at all. I should have felt that I ought to tell the woman that she was setting her children an example which might bear more expensive fruit than apples, then I should have wondered if at that time the woman would have been out of sight.

House Cleaning.

The annual return of this distressing and most contagious condition is now near at hand. What can be done towards reducing its horrors to suffering manhood? One thing should occur to you, that is to see that those books that are piled up in back rooms, on tables and mantels and spoiling by exposure should be housed in dustless, elastic, sectional, economical book-cases of the famous

DELIBERATE MURDER.

New York Sun--Germany's development of her military policy has been marked by certain events which have counted incalculably in the formation of neutral opinion adverse to the German cause. For example: The initial invasion of Belgian territory, the destruction of Louvain, the attack on the cathedral of Rheims, the bombardment of unprotected sea coast towns and now the murder of probably more than 100 men and women, non-combatants, passengers and crews, of the merchant vessels Falaba and Agulla, peacefully and inoffensively navigating the high seas. If it is not deliberate murder, in all the essentials which distinguish that crime from the destruction of human life incidental to carrying on war in the recognized way, what is the right name for the crime?

Finished the Game.

A story is told of the remarkable coolness of a prominent business man of this city, who was passenger on the S.S. Mongolian, when the ship was obliged to put back to Halifax some time ago in a sinking condition. The business man who by the way is a specialist in the selection of spring goods, was alone in the smoking-room playing a game of patience when the officer commanding the Naval Reservists on board, informed him of the serious position in which they were placed. He told him that the ship was in a sinking condition, that the Reservists had been called upon to man the pumps, and that he had better prepare for any emergency that might arise. "Is she really going down?" said the business man. "I am very much afraid she is," said the officer, "as the odds are against us now." Then said the business man, "I hope she'll stay afloat until I finish my game of patience." He stayed in the smoking-room until he finished the game, after which he went out on deck, told the officer he had "got it out" and then took a hand at one of the pumps, where he played another successful game.

Insane Man

ATTEMPTS TO KNIFE HIMSELF.

Last evening, a man belonging to Little Paradise, P.B., was seen acting strangely in the grounds of the C. E. Cathedral, and the police were apprised of the matter. Constable Tobin visited the place and found the stranger, who had a knife in his hand and attempting to drive it through his stomach. He refused to give up the weapon and might have succeeded in his rash act but that the constable remonstrated and took it, taking the man into custody. This morning the outport man was examined by Dr. Cowperthwaite and pronounced to be of unsound mind, after which he was conveyed to the Lunatic Asylum.
