Desperate Remedies

By Thomas Hardy, AUTHOR OF "A PAIR OF BLUE EYES," "THE TRUMPET-MAJOR," ETC.

An agony, which was not the agony of being discovered in a secret, obstructed her utterance for a time. "How can you turn upon me so when I schemed to get you here—schemed that you might win her until I found you were married. Oh, how can you! Oh, Oh!" she wept; and the weeping of such a nature was as harrowing as the weeping of a man.

or a man.

"Your getting me here was bad policy as to your secret—the most absurd thing in the world," he said not heeding her distress. "I knew all, except the identity of the individual, long ago. Directly I found that my coming here was a contrived thing, and not a matter of chance, it fixed my attention on you at once. All that was required was a mere spark of life, to make of a bundle of perceptions an organic whole."

"Policy how can you talk of policy? Think, do think. And how can you threaten me when you know—you know—that I would readily befriend you without a threat?"

"The Erie is the only line running through Canada that gives the people of London the will take advantage of it by purchasing the tickets wis the favorite Erie and save themselves the annoyance of charging cars and jumping off the trains for meals.

"Yes, yes, I think you would," he said more kindly; "but your indifference for so many, many years has made me doubt it."
"No, not indifference—'twas enforced silence; my father lived."

He took her hand and held it gently.

chose, 'sne moutants do or' was your marriage with her was my pet idea long before it was yours? What must I do or' "Scarcely anything; simply this. When I have seen old Mr. Springrove, which I have seen old Mr. Springrove, which I shall do in a day or two, and told him that he will be expected to rebuild the houses. See him yourself, in order that the proposal made may not appear to be anything more than an impulse of your own. You or he will bring up the subject of the houses. To rebuild them would be a matter of at least £600, and he will almost surely say that we are hard in insisting upon the extreme letter of the leases. Then tell him that searcely can you yourself think of compelling an old tenant like his father to any such painful extreme—there shall be no compulsion to build, simply a surrender of the leases. Then speak feelingly of his cousin, as a woman whom you respect and love, and whose secret you have learnt that she is heart-sick with hope dierred. Beg him to marry her, his betrothed and your friend, as some return for the consideration toward his father. Don't surgest too early a day for the marriage, or he will suspect your some motive beyond womanly sympathy. Coax him to make a promise to her that she shall be his wife at the end of a twelvemonth, and get him, on assenting to this,

her."
"So has already asked him to do that."
"So much the better—and telling her too,
that he is about to fulfill his long-standing engagement to marry his cousin. If you think it worth while, you may say Cytherea was not indisposed to think of me before she knew I was married. I have a note at home she wrote me the first evening I saw her, which looks rather warm, and which I could show you. Trust me, he will give her up. When he is married to Adelaide Hinton, she will be induced to marry me—

perhaps before; a woman's pride is soon wounded."

"And hadn't I better write to Mr. Nyttleton, and inquire more particularly what's the law upon the houses?"

"Oh, no, there is no hurry for that. We know very well how the case stands—quite enough to talk in general terms about it. And I want the pressure to be put on to young Springrove before he goes away from home again."

She looked at him furtively, long, and sadly, as after speaking he became lost in thought, his eyes listlessly tracing the pattern of the carpet. "Yes, yes, she will be mine," he whispered, carcless of Cytherea Aldelyffe's presence. At last he raised his eyes inquiringly.

"I will do my best, Æneas," she answered.

Mr. Job Scales, of Toronto, writes: A short time ago I was suffering from Kidney Complaint and Dyspepsia, sour stomach and lame back; in fact, I was completely prestrated and suffering intense pain. While in this state a friend recommended me to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. I used one bottle, and the permanent manner in which it has cured and made a new man of me is such that I cannot withhold from the proprieors this expression of my gratitude."

The custom house reports show the shipment of lumber from Alpena the present season to be 200,831,000 feet, of which 8,505,000 feet were shipped during the past week. Most of the Alpena city lumber and shingle mills were in operation on the last of November; and some of them expected to continue work for a short time in December, an unusual occurrence.

shingle mills were in operation on the last of November; and some of them expected to continue work for a short time in December, an unusual occurrence.

The New Westminster correspondent of the Vancouver News, writing on Nov. 28, says: "Mr. James Corcoran, of Stratford, Ont., who has been staying at the Colonial Hotel, in this city, for a few days past, went to Nanaimo by the steamer Dunamuir this morning. Mr. Corcoran has recently sold out his wholesale grocery business in Stratford, where he owns a considerable amount of real estate, and in an interview your reported was informed that it is his intention to build a saw mill and shingle factory as soon as he has selected as autable location. Having inspected the lumber factories of the Royal City, he is much impressed with the prospects here."

The widow of ex-Senator Zach Chandler and mother-in-law of Senator Hale, of Maine, is building in Washington what is undoubtedly the finest private residence in the city, and which, when it is finished, will rather cast the White House in the shade. Like the executive mansion, Mrs. Chandler's palace is built entirely of white brick and stone, and its solidity and everestyle of architecture suggests rather a public building than a private house. The ground on which the mansion stands is said to have cost $10 a foot. No expense is to be spared in the turnishing, and the housewarming is being looked forward to with a great deal of interest by society.

Wm. Baer, a merchant tailor at Manistee for over 20 years, was killed Sunday while hunting. He and a companion named Bruegmann agreed, should they become separated in the woods, to shoot twice when ready for home. About 4 Bruegmann heard two shots and went to the road. Not finding Baer he came to town. Baer not returning during the night, a searching party went out and in a wind fall four mile from here found Baer's body lying between two logs. He had evidently been climbing over the logs, dragging his gun by the muzzle, which discharged its load into his right side. When f
