From the Mail of yesterday. The statement of the Federal now in the hands of the shareholders⁶ as all along predicted by the Mail, will not only prove highly gratifying to them, but present a showing never yet equalled in the banking annale of this country. After writing off all bad and doubtful debts, deducting charges for interest and management, and without including the amount received for accrued dividend upon the new issue of stock up to date of payment, the net profils for the half year amount to $155,998.13, which is equivalent to 10.15 mer cent per annum on the average capital favorably on it. Here is what they said : From the Globe of Yesterday. The half-yearly statement of the Federal bank will no doubt cause surprise on the part of "bears" by its magnificent showing. A great deal has been written lately against this institution, but the shareholders have to be congratulated upon the large net profit of 19.15 per cent, and as the "rest" is nearly for any order the pridum centric to be is nearly 50 per cent of the paid-up orpital, an in-creased dividend may be confidently expected in the

It was pointed out that the practice was illegal, that it was demoralizing, that it was dangerous to I, That instead of the present system of examinations in the faculty of arts in the university and was demoralizing, that it was dangerons to the bank and to the public, that it jeop ardised and lessened the security which the billholders and depositors were entitled to, and that it was a practice that had nor been sanctioned by usage in either New York or London, both hot-beds of specula-tion. No direct answer was made to these charges. The plan is to live them down, and the Globe and Mail are assisting the officers and directors of the offending banks to brazen it out. That is what the para-graphs above quoted mean, and that is why they are published. Once the matter is allowed to drop, and big profits are shown it is hoped that the thing will blow over, the imperial government. The New York World says that at the expiration of the term of the marquis of Lorne the colonial office will pass the reins of the Canadian government to Sir John Macdonald. We have not to discuss actually the choice of the functionary. We simply pause at a project which seems to us too good to be realized. With a Canadian governor and the commercial independence that we certainly shall presently enjoy, what will remain of the colonial depend-ence? Almost nothing. That dependence will be purely nominal, and some day or other it will vanish by reason of its insigni-ficance. It may be said that it is important to confide the government to men far removed from our politics, who having avoided our struggles, would be able to keep themelves clear of party influences, and exercise in an impartial manner their own judgment in the affairs of state. These reasons have weight. But we beconducted not for individual profit but for the benefit of the community, each person contributing, according to his capabilities, and Freceiving from it according to his wants, under the supervision of the govern-ment. His history of the French revolu-tion largely contributed to bringing about the revolution of 1848. He was accused of being implicated in the insurrectionary movement of May and June, and in Au-gust his prosecution was authorized by the constituent assembly of which he had been elected a member. He escaped to Eng-land, where he remained a voluntary exile until the fate of Napoleon III. He then returned to France and published his works written in exile.

Was named as the probable net earnings. Bulls and bears of course viewed the matter in a different light, and while the former congratulated them-selves and each other, the latter endeavored to make the very prosperity of the bank the subject of fresh attacks. However, it is said figures cannot lie, and no amount of newspaper talk either for or against the prospects of the bank will have any effect on the grouped that he is looking after the best interests of the shareholders, who alone are concerned, and they in furm will fully appreciate the excellent scoourt he has_ended of his stew ardabig for the last half-year. At Toronto no observations could be taken of any of the four contacts in the transit of Venus. At the observatory only one or two passing glimpses were got of the transit, and these of the shortest duration.
The sun was completely enveloped at the time of the contacts of the planet, and Mr Carpmael was unable to ascertain any data as to the time of ingress and egress. The observations here consequently will count nil. Tucady aftermoon it mained, drizzled and snowed, wad at night not a light was visible in the aeavens. Falling snow and dense clouds hushered in Wednesday morning, and from the outset there appeared to be little probabilities of the clouds breaking as on the first and second contacts could be observed. The forecast unfortunately proved true. At the hour when it was known Venus would make her first contact Mr. Carpmael and his assistants were on sharp lookout, but the clouds were too heavy to admit of anything being seen at all. The disappointment was of course vere to staking the time of the first external and first internal contects was goe and the observers looked as glum as the overhang-ing clouds. Between 10 and 11 the clouds began to break and it seemed as if the system wight be sufficiently clear for taking obser-vations of the egressing contacts. Venerable Archdeacon Boddy occupied the chair. He stated in his introductory remarks that people did not think enough about the evils of intemperance. The first speaker was Rev J Cayley, who remarked speaker was Rev J Cayley, who remarked that intemperance was one of the greatest evils with which the church of England had to deal. He described several typical cases of intemperance to show the evils of the vice," and thought that if they could do away with liquor, they could also close two-thirds of their jails The remedy proposed for this evil is combination and organization. All the schemes of the church, such as missions, were conducted by organized bodies or, committees. The Church of England has created an organiza-tion for this purpose. As a temperance Hon. the United States there are 70,000 persons who go to drunkards' graves every year. Rev. O. Aslachson told a number of in-teresting anecdotes connected with his career as a temperance worker. He had once thought it would be unmanly to sign a total abstinence pledge, but his views were different now. Mr. W. H. Howland, the last speaker, compared the movement to a rope, one half of which was held by the temperance peo-ble and the other by the liquor sellers. The partial abstainers held the middle of the rope. It was necessary that some should

It was necessary that some should hold the extreme end of the rope to keep it taut, and this is where he had taken his stand. He said that there were very few tamilies in Toronto who could stretch families in Toronto who could stretch out their hands and touch a relative or friend who did not exemplify the evils of intem-perance. There are 190 saloons in Toronto, where ten would be sufficient, which live by making drunkards. Speaking of it from a biblical point of view he said there were no saloons in Judea.
