A POSTAL COURTSHIP.

She really is the prettiest little creature I ever saw," said Mr. Willoughby Vane, as he turned from the window for the added, addressing the housemaid, who was clearing away the breakfast things, "have you any idea who the people are who have taken old Mr. Adderly's house opposite?"

Well, yes, sir, if you please," returned the handmaiden. "I met their cook at the grocer's the other day and she said that her master's name was Black—Capting Choker Black—and that he was staying here on leave of absence with his wife and daughter, sir."

Oh! indeed; did she happen to mention the young lady's name?"

"Yes, sir; she called her Miss Eva."

"Eva! What a charming name!" mur mured Mr. Willoughby to himself; then he added aloud:

he added aloud:

"That will do, Jane; thank you."

Mr. Willoughby Vane was a bachelor,
28 years old, rich, indolent and tolerably good-looking. He lived with a widowed mother in a pleasant house in Albany, and,
having nothing else to do, had fallen desperately in love with his paetty vis-aany county sought an opportunity desperately in love with his pasetry vis., and anxiously sought an opportunity for an introduction. However, having discovered the name of his enchantress he determined to address her anonymously by determined to address her anonymously by letter.

Having decided upon taking this step, the next thing to be done was to put it into execution, and having shut himself in his little study, after many futile attempts, he succeeded in framing an epistle to the lady to his satisfaction, begging her, if she valued his peace of mind, to return an answer to "W. V., Postoffice, Albany." That done, he went out for a walk and dropped the letter in the nearest box.

Regularly three times a day for a week afterward he called at the postoffice to see whether an answer had arrived for him. As the week advanced Willoughby began beyond the doctor's skill to cure.

But her son laughed at the idea, knowing well that his complaint was beyond the doctor's skill to cure.

He was beginning to despair of ever receiving a reply, when, to his great delight, on the seventh morning a letter was handed to him by the postraster, written in a dainty female hand, and addressed to "W. V." Almost unable to conceal his emotion he quitted the postoffice, broke open the seal and drank in the contents.

They were evidently of a pleasant na-

For a moment his first impulse was to salute her respectfully; but immediately afterward he bethought himself that as he was still incegnito, the young lady would perhaps feel insulted by the action. Besides, how could she have any idea that he was "W, V.?" So he went in-doors and amused himself for three hours in inditing a reply to her letter, which he posted the same afternoon, and in due course a second answer arrived.

And so matters went on, a constant interchange of letters being kept up for a fortnight, during which time Mr. Willoughby Vane spent his days in running to and from the postoffice, writing letters and watching his fair neighbor from the window of the dining-room.

"Confound it!" he would sometimes say to himself. "How very provoking the dear girl is! She never will look this.

"Confound it!" he would sometimes say to himself. "How very provoking the dear girl is! She never will look this way. I do wish I could catch her eye, if only for a moment. What a horridly sour-looking old crab the mother is! Depend upon it, Willoughby, that poor child is anything but happy at home with those two old fogies. Indeed, her letters hint as much." And having given vent to his feelings, he would put on his hat and walk to the postoffice, or shut himself in his room and compose another note to his "Dearest Eva."

"Dearest Eva."
At length, three weeks having flown At length, three weeks naving nown rapidly away in this manner, he received a letter one morning from the young lady; which ran as follows:

"To W.V." "Sir—As it is useless to continue a correspondence in this manner, I think it is now time for you to throw off your incognito, and reveal your true name and position to one to whom you are not totally indifferent. Believe me that and position to one to whom you are not totally indifferent. Believe me that nothing inspires love like mutual confidence. Prove to me that I have not been impudent in answering your letters by at once informing me who you are. It is with no feeling of idle curiosity that I ask this, but simply for mutual satisfaction.

Yours, etc., "EvA."

To which Willoughby replied by return of post:

What sort of temper are your "Well, that's rather a difficult question to answer," said Willoughby, smiling for the first time. "Hang it, sir; not at all!" returned the captain. "If any one asked me my temper, I should say, 'Hasty, sir—confoundedly hasty!" and Choker Black's proud of it, sir—proud of it!"

"Say about the average," said Willoughby, timidly."

of post: "DEAREST EVA (if you will pernit me to eall you so)—Have you not for weeks past observed a young man, with his hair brushed back, anxiously watching you my daughter by sight?"

Temper average, said the captain jotting it down. "I think these are about all the questions I have to ask. You know my daughter by sight?" from the window of the opposite house? And, although you have apparently never taken the slightest notice of him, I trust that his features are not altogether repulsive to you. I am that individual. "Charmed by the graceful magic of thine eye. Day after day I watch and dream and sigh; Watch thee, dream of thee, sign for thee alone. Fair Star of Albany-may I add, mine own? alone.

Fair Star of Albany—may I add, mine own?
—to quote with some alterations the noble stanza of the poet Byron. And now I have a favor to ask you. Whenever you see me at the window take no notice of me at present, lest my mother should observe it. In a few days she will be going out of town, and then we can throw off all restraint. Till then, adieu! Adieu, my adorable one, adieu! My eyes are ever on you. Your own,

To which epistic came the following answer:

DEAR SIR—Your explanation is perfectly satisfactory. I may also add that your features are not at all repulsive to "Eya."

"Bless her! what a delightful little soul she is!" ejaculated Willoughby.

And hang me, sir, if I don't riddle you with bullets! Gad, sir, I'm a man of my word, and I'll do what I say, as sure as my word, and I'll do what I say, as a fill down with that?

"Have no fe

And he went out, ordered a new suit of clothes and had his hair cut.

"Willy," said Mrs. Vane to her son the

The answer was as follows:

"My Own Eva—Do what you consider best. My fate is in your hands. If your papa should refuse his consent, I—. But I will not think of anything so dreadful. Fear not that I shall ever retract. Life without you would be a desert, with no oasis to brighten it. Yours, until death, WILLOUGHSY."

That evening, just as Willoughby had finished dinner, he heard a loud double knock at the street door, and on its being opened a strange voice inquired in a loud tone:

tone:

"Is Mr. Willoughby Vane at home?"

His heart beat violently as Jane, entering the room, said:

"A gentleman wishes to speak with you in the library, sir."

And she handed him a card inscribed, "Captain Choker Black, 101 Regiment."

"I will be with him in a moment," said Willoughby, and he swallowed a couple of Willoughby bowed.

"Then, sir, of course you know the business that has brought me here?"
Terribly nervous and scarčely knowing what answer to make, our hero bowed

"Come, come, sir, don't be afraid to speak out! My daughter has made me her confidant, so let there be no reserve between us. Eva has told me all!"

Here poor Willoughby blushed up to the roots of his hair.

"You see, I know all about it. You have fallen desperately in love with the poor girl; and, although you have never exchanged three words together, you are already engaged to be married. Mighty expeditious, upon my word! Ha! ha! ha! Pray, excuse me for laughing, but the idea is somewhat comical! Ha! ha!

As the captain appeared to be in a very good humor, Willoughby's courage began "Don't mention it, sir. You are he

"Don't mention it, sir. You are her father, and have a right to do what you please. But I sincerely trust that you have no objections to offer."
"I? None! Believe me, I shall be delighted to see my Eva comfortably settled. But, hark ye, sir. Business is business. I am a plain, blunt man, and 15 years' sojourn with one's regiment on the plains ourn with one's regiment on the plains loesn't help to polish one. First of all,

"And you think you could be happy

"Think, captain! I am certain of it."
"Very good. Now, hark ye, Mr. Willoughby Vane, marry her, treat her well, and be happy; neglect her, blight her young affections by harshness or cruelty, and hang me, sir, if I don't riddle you with bullets! Gad, sir, I'm a man of my word and I'll do what I say, as sure as my

"Willy," said Mrs. Vane to her son the next morning, "I wish you would do something to improve your mind and not waste your time looking out of the window all day as you have lately done. Come and read the assembly debates to me, if you have nothing else to do."

The worthy lady was a red-hot politician, and for three mortal hours she kept him at his delightful task, at the expiration of which time he succeeded in escaping to his own room, where he wrote the following note to Eva:

"Am I to understand that you consent to our union?"

"Certainly. You can be married to finy dear obild is my first consideration. Gad, sir, I am not a brute—not one of those unnatural parents people read of in novels. Choker Black may be a fire-eater on the field; but, at any rate, he knows how to treat his own flesh and blood."

If, as you say, my features are not altogether repulsive to you, may I hope that you will consent to be mine—mine only?

"WILLOUGHBY."

Back came the reply the next morning:

"DEAR WILLOUGHBY—Your reply has made me feel very happy. It is very dull here—no society except father and mother. I long for more congenial companionship.

In this delightful manner the days flew on—halcyon days, too, they were for Willoughby Vane!" cried the capulation.

"Quite!"

"Mr. Willoughby Vane!" cried the capulation.

"And this—" ejaculated our hero, turning to the young lady.
"Is my SECOND WIFE, sir!"
Mr. Willoughby Vane fled from his home that night. About a month later his almost broken-hearted mother received a letter from him explaining the whole affair, and the post-mark bore the words: "Montreal, Canada."
