

The first part of the report deals with the general situation of the country. It is found that the population is increasing rapidly, and that the land is being cultivated more extensively than ever before. The principal occupations are agriculture and stock raising. The climate is generally favorable, and the soil is fertile. The principal cities are New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. The commerce is flourishing, and the country is becoming more and more civilized.

The second part of the report deals with the internal improvements. It is found that the roads and canals are being improved, and that the navigation is becoming more and more extensive. The principal canals are the Erie Canal and the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. The principal roads are the New York and Pennsylvania Turnpike and the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike. The navigation is becoming more and more extensive, and the country is becoming more and more civilized.

The third part of the report deals with the public affairs. It is found that the government is becoming more and more efficient, and that the public works are being improved. The principal public works are the New York and Pennsylvania Turnpike and the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike. The government is becoming more and more efficient, and the public works are being improved.