WHAT MANITOBA PROBE SHOWS RUSSIAN

The evidence taken before the two royal commissions at Winnipeg to date The evidence taken before the two royal commissions at Winnipeg to date fairly establishes the following facts:

1. That members of the Roblin government, the provincial archivist and other civil servants combined and conspired with the contractor for the parliament buildings so that by padded estimates and other devices the latter obtained from the provincial treasury about one million dollars to which he was

2. That a considerable portion of this loot went into the campaign fund of the government and that a portion of it was paid to civil servants and others having guilty knowledge to leave the country and remain away from Manitoba.

3. That the opposition members of the legislature procured sufficient evidence to expose the foregoing facts and that a deal was made between the leading members of the two political parties in Manitoba by which the Conservatives were to surrender the government and the control of the legislature
