TORONTO HIGH SCHOOLS. The high school situation in Toronto just now is rather puzzling. Overcrowding in the centre undoubtedly there is. We have the words of the respected principal of the Harbord-street Collegiate Institute as authority for the statement that the congestion lies chiefly in the north central part of the gity, in other words, in the locality commonly known as the annex, lying north of Bloor-street, west of Avenue-road and east of Bathurst street. Of the hundred and fifty pupils who constitute the excess over a legitimate attendance at Harbord-street, the greater majority come from the district above mentioned. Take these out of Harbord-street and add at least one hundred more who a year from now will be clamoring for admission to a high school from the same district and there is ample material to justify the erection of a first-class collegiate institute in a section which from its taxpaying power can justly claim a share in the money this city spends upon secondary educa-

It is safe to say that a good school placed right in the heart of this district would in a year's time from its opening be educating between 300 and 400 boys and girls from some of the most wellto-do homes in the city. This is on the basis of population as actually existing at present or sure to exist in the mmediate future. Anyone who takes a walk westward to the Harbord street in doubt as to whether the missing pro-Collegiate Institute will recognize at perty was stolen by Germany or plagiaronce the fact that the district adjoin- ized by The Hamilton Spectator, record as opposed to judges retiring ing this school is so rapidly filling up from the bench to re-enter private praction that a year from now the capacity of that a year from now the capacity of business and boarding-houses are fast more the determining factor, and it is refreshing if not reassuring to know that among the legal deadwood that has found judicial preferment there are a few flickering lights of strong confident, aggressive legal ability.

There will be no general abandonment of the bench for private practice, nor will there be any pronounced movement in that direction. There are able law-yers on the bench whose natural incinations will keep them there. There are will be nown the bench whose inhibity to make as sood a living in private practice is sufficient guarantee of the permanence of their judicial services.
