between the city council and the company. Hamilton would make short work of an alderman who would counsel compromise as a means of bringing the controversy to an end. The company's scheme has failed, and At this hour the posse of police have The Globe's editorial is a confession of the failure. Now that The Globe has shown that the street railway issue in Hamilton is such an innocent affair it might let the public know upon whose authority it speaks. It was only last Thursday that The Globe, editorially declared that the City of Hamilton was having a lesson in the unwisdom of creating a Street Railway Co. Two days later The Globe got new light on the situation. It found that the Hamilton Street Railway Co. was a highly respectable organization. The company had merely changed a practice which it had followed for a number of years, namely the selling or the cars to whoever applied for them of workmen's tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents. There was no cause for growing indignant The Globe gently affirmed. When two persons made an agreement and had a falling out about the terms they went to the courts to settle the matter. would not be surprising if The Globe's informant, the person who prompted its belated tribute to the sterling virtues of the Hamilton Street Railway Company, turned out to be the attorney-general. Contrary to the professed opinions of The Globe and the Hamilton papers The World is not ventilating the street railway situation in Hamilton with the object of injuring Hon. J. M. Gibson. Its one and only motive is to protect the people of Hamilton against the raid of a powerful franchise-holding corporation, which is backed up by all the influences that make it a menace to public rights. In the performance of this duty The World finds that J. M. Gibson is chiefly responsible for the tyrannical methods of the Hamilton Street Railway. Mr. Gibson is the attorney-general of Ontario, who is sworn and paid to serve the public interests. When this paid servant of the people undertakes to engineer an assault on the rights of the people, upon what ground do his newspaper allies claim for him immunity from criticism?

Mr. Gibson cannot gloss over his treachery to the interests he is eworn to protect. He should be the last man in the province to repudiate what is clearly the spirit and not improbably the letter of an agreement between a corporation and a municipality. Mr. Gibson has repeatedly emphasized to the public the solemnity of contracts. The solemnity of his regard for a contract that touches his own interests is shown in the repudiation of a clause which is as clear as words can make it. That clause states that the limited tickets shall be sold on the cars. The company suddenly refuses to sell limited tickets on its cars and attempts to justify its action by disavowing the obligations imposed by its agreement and standing strictly on the statute. This out and out repudiation of contract is inspired by Attorney-General Gibson, the paid lawmaker of the province. To the people of Hamilton who suffer from the abrupt interference with their contract rights the Street Railway Company simply asks
