

for some valuable notes, and finally to Dr. N. E. Dionne, of Quebec, and M. Placide P. Gaudet, whose publications have afforded much assistance.

The contribution is necessarily of a broken and fragmentary character, and might, perhaps, be better characterized as a collection of random notes, than a historical paper. It has moreover the disadvantage of having been very hastily compiled amidst the pressure of more important duties. However such as it is, it is now added to the collections of our Historical Society, with the hope that its publication may stimulate other writers to add their quota to the history of so important a section of our province as "The North Shore."
