"Fruit-a-tives" Made Him Feel As If Walking On Air

Orillia, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1914.
"For over two years, I was troubled with Constipation, Drowsiness, Lack of Appetite and Headaches. One day I saw your sign which read 'Fruit-a-tives make you feel like walking on air.' This appealed to me, so I decided to try a box. In a very short time, I began to feel better, and now I feel fine. I have a good appetite, and everything I eat, and the Headaches are gone entirely. I recommend this pleasant fruit medicine to all my friends."

GERMANS ARE NOW FAR PAST THE ZENITH

Expert Says Enemy has been Fighting on the Down Grade Since January.

Gen. Mallette, one of the officers on Joffre's staff at the Marne, and a recognized military authority, makes the assertion that Germany reached her high-water mark of effectiveness last January. Since then she has not been able to put a new corps into the field. She has merely kept up her reserves by calling upon boys and old men, and by patching up soldiers in their prime wounded since the war began. This fact he regards as significant of German decline, and that she is now declining and must continue to decline he strongly believes. In an article translated in the New York Times he lays stress upon a decline in morale. He says that replacing fallen men little by little exhausts reserves, first in numbers, then in quality. A moment comes when human valor fails before flesh and spirit. He considers the relative populations of Germany and France, observing that the fact of the French population being almost stationary gives her an advantage over Germany, in that while calculations are usually made on the basis of the population in 1914, Germany's population had greatly increased in the preceding 20 years. France's had remained stationary, and it is from the population of 1914 and earlier that both countries draw their soldiers. If Germany had a million more babies than France last year the fact would have no effect upon the military situation.

When Valor Diminishes.
Gen. Mallette says that we ought not to be deceived by colossal numbers. It is the fighting quality that decides the victory. It is admitted that the valor of fighting men diminishes with age. The first-line army is composed of young men, with the active army and its immediate reserves; then the mass of reservists of 27 to 35 years serve to reinforce the experienced first line. Finally, the older classes constitute a sort of "levée en masse" whose mission is rather to defend the national territory or to occupy and guard conquered enemy territory behind the battle front. All these elements, of different qualities, merge into the tragic melee; but there comes a moment, when the struggle is long-drawn-out and sacrifices become more heroic, when the youngest, the first and most exposed, disappear in the inferno, uncovering their elders, who are obliged to face increasing dangers with diminishing powers. Accurate figures with regard to Germany's forces are difficult if not impossible to obtain. Until quite recently Germany has concealed her losses by a fictitious activity. She continued to attack, and the neutral world was led to suppose that the army that attacked is the stronger army. Then, too, Germany has taken advantage of her incomparable system of military railroads and the geographical peculiarities of her position to shuttle troops from one front to another, thus giving the impression of unexhausted numbers. The French expert insists that the morale of troops is infamously affected by being thus transferred from Poland to Belgium and from Belgium to the Balkans. The sense of desperation impresses them; they are like a man who tries to put out a fire, dashing madly from one place to another, the conflagration being no sooner extinguished in one corner than it breaks out in another. They are also taught to despise their allies; they are feeling that the whole burden of the war is upon them, and that they are attempting the impossible.

German Losses Nearly 4,000,000.

THE HOME THE WORLD

Here are Related Activities of Home, Family

Thrill and Economy in the Home.

At the first annual meeting of the Speakers' Patriotic League held a short time ago a resolution was passed "that we consider the practicality and advisability of education for thrift and economy, and for the productive employment of our boys and women as essential to the maximum production of foodstuffs and of munitions, and the conservation of our resources both in the men and money necessary for the prosecution of this war."

Now we have been told of many ways in which we housekeepers could save, all about how to cook cheap cuts off meat that require an endless amount of cooking, and then frequently taste like old shoe leather. We have recently been exhorted to save paper, also to make over and to remake old dresses, not to buy new hats and so on ad infinitum, says The Toronto Mail and Empire.

But no one has come out very boldly against the architects who plan our houses and the builders who run them up—for they can hardly be said to be building—and leave no "cold storage" in the basement to take the place of the old-fashioned cellar where we used to put our store of winter vegetables. The furnace, generally in the centre of the plan with its heat fatal to vegetables of all kinds stored in any portion of the basement. The refrigerator is necessary small; it is not intended for the storing of any considerable amount of foodstuffs. It is in typical modern life is the refrigerator—a thing to be used from day to day and not from season to season.

We do not know why the architects have never thought of building "cold rooms" in the basement, especially in the case of houses where the cold storage could be so cheaply constructed. Ask any housekeeper today how she buys her vegetables, and she tells you of very old will tell you that she buys by the basket from her grocer or of the butcher who calls twice a week. Going to market is a lot of trouble and you have to carry your store home or be disappointed. If there were a cool room or if one had an old-fashioned cellar one could lay in a stock of vegetables and apples in the fall when they are cheap and the one livery would serve. With bins of potatoes, carrots, parsnips, rows of cabbages, boxes of celery, and other things that would constitute real food, one could eliminate that bugaboo of the housewife.
