of the soil and of the extraordinary stock of trout in the latter river, the writer determined to spend a few days in a cruise in that direction. Accordingly, throwing the cares and labor of business aside for SUBSCRIPTION PRICE ONE DOLLAR, in-variably IN ADVANCE. POSTAGE must be for Woodstock en route for the Tobique. The run to Woodstock was made in the usual time and partook of much the same lers over that route. The usual tedious delay at McAdam, where travellers change cars for St. Andrews, St. Stephen or Woodstock, is experienced. A good dinner, however, at the Junction House, is calculated to develop the best feeling and enable a man to overlook a delay that an empty stomach would naturally rebel against. From the Junction to Woodstock the route was entirely new to us, and, although there is little in the scenery or character of the country to interest, yet the time passed pleasantly as we studied the style and characters of our fellow-travellers. Burly lumbermen, six feet to six feet three in their boots, with out shape or comeliness, vet possessing rseat bone and muscle, true representatives of that class whose lives are spent in the woods and on the drives, cutting and bringing to market the lumber for which our Province is so celebrated and on which our business prosperity so much depends. Good-natured fellows these hardy lumbermen are too; "rough, rude and immature," yet good natured withal, for long or short periods, may be made at and the stranger is favorably impressed m, on the most liberal with their natural exuberance of spirits, character of the country, its agricultural and lumber resources, fishing grounds and settlers than could be gathered from years of reading-in fact many of them have penetrated where no newspaper men or book makers have yet set their feet. We arrived in Woodstock on the eve of Dominion Day and found that thriving town all alive and filled with visitors who had come to witness the horse racing on the following day. It is now too late to write in reference to the Woodstock Races on Dominion Day; suffice it to say that the Woodstock Pleasure Grounds are very nicely situated about half a mile from the town, the track, a half mile one, is good and on the day referred to was in

is good and on the day referred to was in splendid condition. The attendance was large, representatives being present from St. Stephen, Calais, Houlton, Presque Isle and surrounding country, from Tobique to Fredericton. Everything in the shape of horse fiestly and vehicles were in demand that morning, and from early dawn the continuous arrival of teams bearing loads of fair country belles and their sun-burnt but warm-hearted and honest looking beaux kept the little town in a constant whirl of excitement. The week previous must have been a busy one for the milliners and fair sex, generone for the milliners and fair sex, gener-ally, for such a display of new hats, dresses and other fixings we never before the road have been withdrawn, while the boats make daily trips, and now it is impossible for the proprieter to supply their places at a day's notice, as all the farmers and their boys will go to the races and cannot spare their nags. Tuesday evening the sports are all over, and, although, the river has not risen any, we learn that the boat will leave at seven for up river. Hastily bolting supper we grasp our baggage and rust for the steamer Andover. A faint show of smoke is issuing from the smoke stack, steam is not yet generated in sufficient quantity to warrant a start; here and there come a bevy of passengers bearing their luggage; between decks the hands busily transfer freight from the City, just arrived from Fredericton. Indications are that the start will be a late one and as passengers arrive the captain is anxiously interrogated as to "when he will start," and "how far he will go." Munquart is finally promised and passengers are comparatively satisfied, as teams can be readily obtained at that place, and the distance to the Tobique is only sixteen miles. Finally the warps are cast off, and the Andover slowly behind the adjacent western hills and heavy black clouds soon enveloped the landscape in darkness. The rain begins to fall and our hopes to reach Mills' landing, where all are sure of comfortable lodgings in clean beds, are blasted. At Richardson's Landing, only seven miles from Woodstock, the boot is run in shore and warps made fast, while the passengers search eagerly for a resting place till Monday. The captain disposed of the fifteen or twenty lady passengers as fast as he could. Chairs, trunks, bags

At early dawn next day we were again steaming quietly along, and one by one the passengers appeared on deck, all looking scedy. There were some whose clothing bore unmistakeable marks of their having slept on the unswept deck or flower barrels. The steward and his staff, about this time, became objects of interest to all. Passengers eagerly watched their movements through the windows and doors of the cook house and saloon. Hard couches and early rising had, undoubtedly, created a strong desire for something to eat. In time breakfast was announced and disposed of in double quick. The Captain collected the fare and announced that he would land us at Florenceville. This summary disposal of his passengers by the Captain excited considerable disappointment and indignation, but the river was very low and still fall-passengers by the passengers by the siderable disappointment and indignation, but the river was very low and still falling, and we were willing to believe he could not do better. At Florenceville carriages and farm waggons were secured with little delay and the passengers for Tobique and beyond soon continued their way up while the steamer gaily and quickly steamed back to Woodstock, there to remain until the next heavy dew or thunder shower would enable her to resume her trips.

The Salt Lake Journal says that recent developments show beyond doubt that an organized band of robbers are operating on the line of the Pacific Railway. Large quantities of stolen goods have been found by the detectives strewn along the line, including a United States mail bag ripp: d open and plundered. The railroad company employs a number of expert detectives, but find themselves powerless to protect their passengers and goods against this band of desperate rufflans. The company have now in their possession the names of ninety desperadoes operating over the line between Ogden and Omaha—men who, having fled from justice for crimes committed, find ready associates to rob and plunder along the railroad. It is thought that all have keys in their possession which will open any car running over the line, were they disposed to enter. A ready market for their plunder is found, and teamsters, apparently honest and unsophisticated—but who are in reality thieves and murdeers and members of the gang—take the goods and sell them to unscrupnious men, who care little where they come from so long as they can get them cheap
