HIGHNESS AND LOWNESS.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh has lately been demonstrating his well-known close-listed attributes by endeavoring to reduce the hop-pickers' wages on his estates in Kent, from the very modest sum of eighteen-pence to one shilling per day. The pickers no longer picked, but instead thereof the pickers "kicked," and threatened to burn the hops. This brought H. R. Nibbs to terms, and the pickers got the same wages as before. This Royal Tar should reflect that in England there are polls and poles; polls for voting, and poles for hops, and plebeian kickers may rally to both. Perhaps in tuning his royal fiddle his Highness has got into the habit of screwing down everything to what he considers the right concert pitch, but however suitable his airs may be for the swell concerts in London, they do not seem to be appreciated by those who go in for hops in Kent.
