

11.

national life which was barely healed after twenty years. That wound has not been opened; but the scar remains. Surely no man in his senses would pretend that we would increase our strength, as a people, by opening the wound once more. And let me add that it is not in one province alone that an attempt to force the issue of conscription for overseas service would lead to controversy, division and probable disunity.