"If you could spend a day here with me, you wouldn't wonder that hair is turning gray at thirty." The speaker, quoted in The Washington Star, was a postoffice clerk, whose mind just then, was running upon the perplexities and worries of his "A thousand and one persons are dinning questions into my ears from morning till night," he said, and he proceeded to describe somewhat at length, and perhaps with some heightening of the colors, experience in point. Only last Friday, he said, a visaged elderly lady came into the window. It was about eight o'clock in the evening, a time when I ordinarily have a little respite.

"Young man," she said, "I dropped a letter into that place an hour ago." Well," I said," that is the proper place for it."

"I know, but I want it again. It wasn't properly directed.' "I am sorry, madam, but it is against the rules for me to return a letter to any one. If it is deficient in its address, write a line to the postmaster of the place to which it is going, and he wifl see that is delivered. Besides there are a thousand or two of letters in that box, and I couldn't find yours, even if it were right for me to do so."

'Sense! Those rules are ridiculous. I must have the letter and alter the I was beginning to get warm der the collar, but I restrained my-"It is forbidden to return a ter." I replied, "and as I said be-fore, I haven't time to run through a thousand or more letters."

"What!" cried the woman, shaking her parasol uncomfortably near se, "don't you suppose I know what you are paid for? You're paid to serve the public, and I tell y must have that letter. It's to John Wesley Dyer, Philadelphia, and I shan't leave this window till hand it out, if I have to stay here till morning. I tried another task. I consented to search the box, and hand the letter to the postmaster, whom the woman could consult in the morning. that wouldn't do, and finally making the best of a bad matter, I went about the search, which took the better part of half an hour, and finally drew out the precious The woman snatched it from my hand, scrawled something upon corner of the envelope, and handed it back to me.

And what do you suppose she had Just this, and nothing written? Just t more: "In haste."

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's Career an Evolutionary Process According to the Newest Current Historian. A new biography of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain has appeared, by N. Morrell Morris. The writer traces utionary process. First as a busi-ness man he labored for himself, made a moderate fortune and con-tentedly retired. As Mayor of Birm-ingham he confined his view to the needs of his fellow-citizens, and as a result of his energy the Government was reformed, until Birmingham today is a model of municipal admin-istration. Entering the House of Commons, he began to work for the welfare of the United Kingdom, with little thought of the rest of the Empire. The next step, turning his Empire. The next step, turning his attention from insular to Imperial affairs, resulted from his withdrawal from the Gladstone Ministry on the home rule issue. A review of the biography in The New York Tribune gives the following summary of this

"Mr. Chamberlain's attitude to the Irish party is shown by a letter writ-ten in 1885, in which he said that the British Government 'ought to welcome suggestion and criticism from every quarter and from all sec-tions and classes of Irishmen, provided they are animated with a desire for good government and not by blind hatred of all government what-ever.' But he added that if Irishmen expected Englishmen and Scotch-men to treat them with greater consideration they must correspondingly show greater consideration for public opinion in England and Scotland. His policy from beginning to end was, as he said in 1884, to secure the Lyichmen over which and every to Irishmen every right and every privilege which legislation has secured or may secure for Englishmen and Scotsmen.' But never—it is essen-Scotsmen. tial to remember this-was there single hint that he favored, or would ever in any degree favor, such a measure of separation as was contem-plated in Mr. Gladstone's scheme of home rule. On December 17, 1885,

" 'As to Mr. Gladstone has again and again said that the first duty of Liberal statesmen is to maintain the integrity of the Empire and the supremacy of the Crown. Subject to that, he is prepared to give the largest possible measure of local government that could be conceived or proposed. Well, I entirely agree with those principles, and have so much faith in the experience and patriotism of Mr. Gladstone that I cannot doubt that if he should ever see his way to propose any scheme of arrangement, I shall be able conscientiously to give it my humble support. But it is due to the Irish party to say that all actions of the Liberal party-Radicals as much as Whigs—are determined that the in-tegrity of the Empire shall be a

"This faith in Mr. Gladstone was presently disturbed by more or less authentic intimations that the latter was putting into the which he was formulating some pro visions contrary to Mr. Chamberlain's sine qua non. So when, at the end of January, 1886, Mr. Gladstone invited Mr. Chamberlain to accept a place in his Cabinet, the latter wrote him frankly that he could not do so unless he might have 'unlimited liberty of judgment and rejection' concerning forthcoming Irish legislation, since it had been intimat-ed that Mr. Gladstone was framing proposals to which he (Mr. Chamberlainj could not agree. Mr. Glad-stone assured him that he might have such literty in the fullest degree, and upon that understanding Mr. Chamberlain entered the Cabin-Mr. Gladstone then completed draft of his famous home rule bill without taking into his confidence a single member of the Cabinet save Mr. John Morley, and 'sprung it' upon the Cabinet in finished form. Mr. Chamberlain thereupon pointed out to his leader that the bill, in his opinion, tended to impair the integrity of the Empire and the supremacy of the Crown, and that, fore, in accordance with his declara-tion of December 17, already quoted, he could not support the measure; and he resigned his place in the Cabinet. That is, in brief, the story of Mr. Chamberlain's departure from the Gladstonian Cabinet. The whole procedure was consistent and straightforward: and the epithet of 'Judas' which was hurled at Mr. Chamberlain for it was as undeserved as it was silly."

An English Transvanl Justice. Sir William Smith has gone to the Transvaal, where he is to have one of the newly-created judicial appointments in the High Court, which opened on the 15th. He has had a varied experience since he joined the colorial service in 1880, having served as a puisne judge on the Gold Coast, in Cyprus and in British Guiana. After the Boers were driven from Na-tal Sjr William-who was in London on leave from Georgetown-was spe cially selected to go to Pietermaritz-burg to preside over the Treason Court. He got through that work rapidly and well, and returned to London some time ago with apparently no idea of going back to Brit-ish Guiana. Sir William was in Cyprus for fifteen years—the last five as Chief Justice—and was knighted in recognition of his useful work there. He was educated at Trinity Hall. Cambridge, and called to the bar in 1875. He was only 27 when appointed a judge in the Gold Coast Colony. Since '96 he has acted as Chief Justice in British Guiana.
