HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL FACULTY AS BEING A PURE AND WHOLE-SOME BEVERAGE.

Melchers Red Cross Canadian Gin highly appreciated and prescribed prominent physicians as being a pure and wholesome beverage. Having been matured for years in bonded warehouses controlled by the Government, Melchers "Red Cross" has acquired a mellowness of taste, a delicacy of flavor unknown to any other gin. These qualities can be obtained only by great age. The distinguishing character of the "Red Cross" is that it has not the fiery taste and disagreeable aroma of nearly all imported Gins. Beware of imitations and substitutions. The genuine Melchers Red Cross Canadian Gin has a Government stamp over the Both room, etc. Leaving the city; capsule on every bottle. It is the only gin having such a guarantee.

ncoe Parents Grieving Over the Disappearance of Their Daughter.

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 22.-W. Harris, wealthy oil well owner, of Petrolea, s in Windsor, looking for his 15-yearold daughter Mattie, who disappeared a week ago. Since then no trace of her has been found. She had a comfortable home, and the only reason her father can give for her going away is that her mother took her from the High school and kept her at home. No young man was paying her attention and an elopement is considered out of the question. He is heartbroken over er disappearance, and fears that omething has happened to her. He thinks that she may be in Detroit.

Detective Mahoney was given charge of the case, and he will enlist the services of Detroit officers to find her.

SPIRITUALIST

Judge Britton Severely Condemns Blasphemous Book Produced in Court.

The application of Andrew Smith, of Huron county, for the custody of his two children, now in the care of his wife, who is living apart from him, was refused at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, yesterday, by Mr. Justice Britton. Smith claimed his wife was a spiritualist, and therefore incapable of taking care of the children. Judge Britton finds otherwise, and says:-"Her brother and sister are spiritualium, and apparently imposes a lot of der at the ungratefulness of an old ists. The sister claims to be a mednonsense on her friends, as coming from the spirit world. Mrs. Smith doesn't know what to make of all

Continuing, His Lordship strong things about a spiritualistic book produced in court: "It is, I think, deplorable that respectable peo-ple like Mrs. Smith's father and brother should permit in their house such a book as the one produced, called Bible Morals.' It is the most blasphemous production that has come under my notice. There is no evi-dence that Mrs. Smith read it. The children are too young to understand it, and I have no reason to believe that she is in sympathy with the book. She would, I feel sure, as soon give her children poison as teach them the lessons contained in the book."

The father receives permission to visit the children. In this connection His Lordship says:—"The mother should not instal in the minds of the children hatred of the father, and when the father meets the children she should not call her father and brother as if to guard her against burglars. If the sight of the father is hateful to the mother, let her not

J. W. WHITE, Barrister. Opposite Grand Opera House, Chatham.

Alberta has been long known to the balance of Canada as a ste ed at Frank, Alberta), and the wil and wooly cowboy, with his high heeled boots, big sombrero, and ica ther chaps, has long been king of the roost, busting bronchos herding horned cattle all over the broad expanse of Alberta's prairies and far up into the foothills of the main Rockies. But as with the wolfers and old-time bull-whackers, his field is becoming limited, and what with the mining towns spring-ing up in the foothills and the flock-ing in of settlers into the prairie sections who are actual farmers, the old-time cow-puncher will fade away in Alberta, the same as he has don in Colorado and Montana, drifting into other pursuits or striking out farther into the wilderness in search less range. cowboy, like the prospector filled a place in the settling up and civilizing of the West that is not only unique but could not have been filled by any other class of men He was the forerunner of civilization on the plains, driving the cattle far-ther out into the unknown lands and making a stand-off with the coy-ote and Indians.

of free grazing ground and a bound

He originated back east "on the farm," where as a tow-headed boy he learned to bust bronchos by riding Old Bill around the pasture field, and as he drove Star and Daisy up from the back field to be milked, he dreamed and longed for the day when he would be a wild cowboy with a big gun and an object of terror to timid women and little children. By being a good boy and picking potato bugs doing chores for the neighbors, whose boys had grown up and gone, he accumulated enough of the wherewithal to buy a ticket out West, and after bidding a tearful farewell to the old folk and being supplied with a lunch basket bigger than the dugout he is destined to occupy for many a long day, he starts out. He arrives finally at his destination, some new railroad town, on the edge of the sunbaked plain, that looks to the pilgrim like an absolute desert. Here the buildings are built up of inch boards, stood on end, and every other place bears the legend Here he gets his first perience of frontier life, meets luture companions the cow-hands, is introduced to a bucking broncho, meets the ranch foreman, and hires out for $30 a month to go out on the ranch, to live on flapjacks, baand black coffee, and work eighteen hours a day and say that he likes it. He invests his last cent in a big six-shooter and broadbrimmed hat, and in six months is a full-fledged cow-puncher, priding himself on being able to yell louder harder, and stand up under more whiskey than any other man on the range. In about a year he commences to realize that life on the range is not all sunshine; that driving cattle out of the brush to rustle, is not fun by cow who will turn and fight him after he has pulled her out of the mud. He finds out that successful cattle raising is a business, that it means hard work and the exercise of brain tissue. Then, if he has the right kind of leather in him, he either makes up his mind to quit punching or settles down to business to accumulate enough to start a herd for himself, walks away from ble, and lets booze alone. He has thus reached the stage in his career when he becomes a good citizen and cow-puncher, and he looks with disgust upon the tenderfoot who pulls his hat, slaps his horse over head, yells like a "fool Injun," and who is more likely to shoot himself in a row than anyone else. But he, like the Indian, is beginning to feel the effects of the barbed wire fence, for what was once the boundless prairies, over which herded his stock at will, is now fast becoming dotted with the settlers' homesteads, and he must seek pasture lands farther north if he wishes to enjoy the old freedom and have room to give his cayuse a forty-mile gallop straight-away without having to get down and lead him through some farmer's gate.

Doing a Good Business.

A Toronto woman, while shopping the other day, thoughtlessly picked up an umbrella belonging to another woman and started to walk off with t. The owner stopped her, and the absent-minded woman, with many apologies, returned the umbrella.
