Local Mutters. The Vice-Regal

Party.

EARLY yesterday evening the bustle again commenced about the streets, some illuminating their dwellings and stores, others preparing for the torchlight procession. Towards 9 o'clock carriages began to roll up to Government House, with those who were to attend the levee, which was announced to open at 9 sharp Earlier in the evening a dinner party had been given by their Excellencies. at which were all our M. P. P.'s and M. P.'s. M. L. C.'s and Senators in town; our city functionaries and two or three others. After the ladies had retired to the drawing room headed by the Princess, Hon. John A. Beckwith proposed the health of the Queen, which was drunk with the honors.

The levee was held in the Drawing Room, the Marquis on the right dressed in uniform, and wearing his orders. On the left was Her Royal Highness who wore awhite brocade silk dress, with a gold thread running through the front, trimmed with white satin, lace and gold and silver head the Campbell badge, orders of Victoria and Albert and India order. gold or naments, with diamonds and pearls. Those who were presented left a card at the entrance to the presence chamber, and another with an Aide-de-Camp (Major de Winton), who read the name. The party so announ ced bowed first to the Marquis, passed a couple of paces and then bowed to Her Royal Highness, thence going into the Ball Room. It was a subject Princess did not bow as those presented passed her. This was because the par" ties so slighted had departed from the etiquette by making only one bow. etiquette by making only one bow.

As the Marquis was nearest, the first cream colored silk; dress, low necked sleeves, and train trained with Valenbow belonged to him and Her Royal Highness was merely returning the of miles for a Vice-Regal and a Regal salutation. The Departure. About 8 o'clock this morning crowds began to gather at Sherman's wharf to see their Excellencies depart. Captain Cropley had his guard of honor drawn up, who on the approach of their Excelencies "presented arm." At the head of the wharf the party stopped, and Mrs. Maunsel presented the Princess with a boquet which she accepted with thanks. The Marquis and Princess then shook hands with the Metropolitan and his Aady, with his Worship the Mayor, and with Col. and Mrs. Maunsel. The Marquis was dressed in a plain shooting suit and black felt hat, her Highness in a light travelling dress, looking, it was remarked on every side, lovely. She looked her gratitude to the throngs who cheered and waved their handkerchiefs, and then stepped on board The members of the Government then took leave of their guests, and His Ex cellency and Her Highness both expressed their obligations to the Government, both for the excellence of their arrangements and their attention to them during their visit. A quiver on the lip of Her Higness in telling her obligations and expressing her gratitude spoke more eloquently than words could, and well repaid those most concerned for time and trouble. Three hearty cheers were given, Her Highness and His Excellency both standing on the quarter deck acknowledging the cheers. They stood gazing at the wharf till they became nprecognizable in the distance. The boat faded away and people turned away somewhat sad, for it was then they realized that eeting dream, that the daughter of our Queen was no longer in the city.

His Worship the Mayor to day received the following letter from Major EDITION

The following is a summary of the judgments delivered to-day by the Court on the Canada Temperance Act. This was a rule nisi for a certiorari obtained and argued last Trinity term before Allen, C. J., the question being the ultra vires of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878.

The judgement of the Court is as fol-and commerce. If so, it is good. The preamble states it is for another pur pose, but the whole act may be looked at. My opinion is the Act is for the Parliament has no power to affect the licensing power of the local legislatures. It is said the object of the Act is a legislation against crime. It is not such an Act as is intended by the Imperial Act; it interferes with civil rights and property. In Reg. vs Justices of Kings the court said the Parsubject. But this is not legislation the power the Parliament had to make laws, but dealing with a law which in-I think the rule should be made ab-

If the Act regulated trade and commerce, civil rights and property should give way. But I do not think it regulates trade and commerce. It does not prohibit the sales of liquor; and I am not prepared to say but the Parliament might have prehibited it entirely it it chose. But it professes to restrict the sale; a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the local legis lature. I have doubts if this case was
