BROWN'S STROKE OF LUCK.

"I'm hanged if I know how it is," muttered Brown, as, waiting his train, he paced up and down.

"But I've been out of crib for three months to the day. And not the least chance of a berth comes my way. There are far bigger fools than myself doing well. And I've got to go home with the same tale to tell. I'd take any job—there's nothing I'd stick at; But continued ill-luck such as mine—well, I kick at."

"It hits a man hard to go home every night. With the same sorry story. 'There's nothing in sight.' And to hear the dear wife, with a smile on her face, say, 'With a kiss, you will soon find a place.' Is the worst pill of all, for I know how things stand—The rent, rates, and taxes are clean out of hand. And she tries to look bright and to show no concern—Bless her heart, I'll repay her when things take a turn."

Now, as Brown walked that platform and waited his train. He schemed many schemes and built castles in vain;

Then he got in his carriage and settled him down. For a good honest think through that journey from town. The train started out, then Brown looked round to see A basket reposed on the seat. "Ah!" said he, "Some fellow has lost the train, I am thinking—That's the worst of those chaps with their good-byes and drinking."

As the train sped along from that basket there came A sound. Brown sat up; he listened; the same Small cry issued from it. "Ye gods!" muttered he, "That's a baby, or else I'm mad as can be."

The small cry grew louder, then Brown raised the lid. And, sure enough, there a small infant lay hid. Attached to its dress was a note, which Brown read. "The person who finds me," the short missive said, "And gives me the love that a mother should give, I'll amply repay so long as I live."

As he turned o'er the sheet a something fell down— A fifty-pound note; a cry escaped Brown; And he read that the same would be sent each half-year. When an "ad." in "The Times" on named dates would appear. Now, poor, hard-up Brown—let those blame him who can— Took the basket and child, as would many a man;

And I needn't say here Mrs. Brown had a fright. When he walked in that evening with that stranger mite. "The police, dear," said she. "Oh, hang them!" cried he. "We haven't a kiddy, old pet. You can be As good as a mother to that poor little waif. And I think you'll admit that the money is safe." And Mrs. Brown took to her heart that small mite. And for long years it cheered her and made her home bright. And the fifty pounds came each half-year to the date. Half of which was put for the child's future state. For Brown got a job shortly after his find. With a firm who to all their employees were kind. The little child grew, and at times would be there. With mummy to take daddy home from work's care. And his chums would remark on her beauty, and say, "You ought to be proud of her, B., anyway."

And from girlhood to womanhood so did she grow. And still to the City at times would go, And on one of those journeys she met Mr. D. The son of the boss who employed Mr. B. Love at first sight—we know it of old— Why should the other sweet meetings be told? But love ne'er yet ran in the smoothest of ways. And in most of love's trials it's the woman who pays. One evening the boss with his son issued forth. To their motor, conveying them home to the North. And Brown with his daughter were standing near by. And the face of the girl caught his principal's eye. For a moment he started, shook hands, and then said. A few words of greeting, and off the car sped. "Dad," said the youth, as the car sped along, "That's the girl that I love." The old man's face set strong. "A fancy that passes, my boy," he replied. "She's the one girl in life, sir," the younger man cried. "Tut, tut," said his father, proceeding fito read: As a matter of fact, thoughts were busy indeed. Next morning the boss sent for Brown to his room. "On the carpet," said some; Brown had thoughts of a doom. As many a man's had at moments like that. But he went, and he faced the old man as he sat. "Sit down, Brown," said he; "I have something to say:

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS

Cannot be cured with ordinary soothing syrups. The disease must be attacked at the root to eradicate the irritation of the lungs, heal the wounds and strengthen the respiratory organs. The composition of

of Tar and Cod Liver Oil and other Medicinal Extracts marks it amongst all other remedies as the true specific for the diseases of the throat, the bronchial tubes and the lungs. Here are a few conclusive proofs:

W. STERLING.

CHURCH POINT, July 31, '08. Blacking & Mercantile Co., Ltd., Amberst, N.S.
Dear Sirs,—Nearly one year ago I had my first order of 'Mathieu's Syrup' from you. It was not known in this country, and I gave samples to several families whom I knew would use it. After a few weeks I began to have a call for it, and trade has increased wonderfully since. I have not the least doubt but that it will soon be the best selling remedy for coughs, colds, etc., on the market. In my store here sales are good and our people ask for it. Several stores in this county now keep it in stock and report sales increasing. I have bought from you since August 16th, 1907, 4 Gross and have only three dozen on hand at this date and which I am holding for retail trade in my store. Yours truly,
LOUIS A. McLANSON.

AGAINST HEADACHE there is no remedy so active as Mathieu's Nerve Powders which contain no opium, morphine or chloral. 25 cents per box of 18 powders.

How old is the girl whom I saw yesterday?" For a moment Brown started—'twas a sudden request. And he thought a clean statement just then was the best. So he told the whole story, from beginning to end. Just as he might have done to a friend. And when he had finished the old man sat still. Then said, "You'll be silent?" Brown answered, "I will." "That child, my dear boy, is the child of my brother. He's dead now, alas! and so is her mother. I knew her at once—the same dear, sweet face, The same gentle smile, the same dainty grace. We both loved her—that is, my brother and I—I need not say more of the days long gone by. But my son last night told me he loves, and I know If he loves like his father, then come weal or woe, Naught I can say will turn him aside From making that poor little foundling his bride. They're cousins; there's naught to prevent such a thing; But, Brown, this promise I from you would wring: Destroy every trace of the past; ne'er by word Or deed let them know long ago what occurred. Let her be as she has been, your child to the end. 'Twere a pity to tell them the truth now my friend. Do this, and my boy shall be happy; and you— Well, shall join my son here when I vanish from view." The two men's hands met in silent assent. And sealed for all parties a world of content.

His colleagues, of course, were with wonderment struck. But they ne'er learnt the secret of Brown's stroke of luck.

King George's Kindness.

New York, March 14.—A London cable says: A Welsh lad, Idris Thomas, who recently had both his feet amputated owing to tuberculosis, has received from King George a gift of money to enable him to buy artificial feet. The boy painfully made his way to Buckingham Palace yesterday for the purpose of personally thanking the King, who, however, at the time was absent. Hearing of the call and the lad's disappointment King George sent for him and received him to-day, when the King gave him a scarf pin as a memento of the occasion and sent him to the Trelowar Cripples' Home, where he will be taught a trade.

Aeroplane for Honeymoon.

Paris, March 11.—The first authentic aeroplane wedding is told of today in a despatch from Avignon. The bridegroom, a well known aviator named Voisier, flew to a field next to the church where the wedding took place. Directly after the ceremony the airman and his bride, who was Mlle. Bremond, mounted the two-seated Blériot and flew the 100 and more miles separating Avignon from Nice, where the first part of the honeymoon is to be passed. Voisier hopes to fly on to Genoa and home to Paris with his wife.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

TRY THE SUNLIGHT WAY

LET TROUBLE ALONE!
By WALT MASON.

About the sanest motto, methinks, that ever grew, is "Never trouble trouble till trouble troubles you." We are sorry o'er the future, we worry o'er the past, and worry is the harvest of all our pains at last; calamities that threaten are lighter than they seem, and all our dark forebodings are but a winter dream. And no one loves the fellow who's always in a stew, so never trouble trouble till trouble troubles you. How foolish, how wrong-headed are all the human crowd! For when the sky is sunny they're searching for a cloud; and when the crops are thriving they murmur and complain; they fear there'll be too little or else too much of rain; and when their health is buoyant they pore o'er almanacs until they're sure they suffer from bunions on their backs; and so their useless worries just keep them sick and blue—oh, never trouble trouble till trouble troubles you! Of course the world has troubles and some of them will come and smite you in the mid-diff and put you out of plumb; but don't go forth to meet them and fold them to your breast, but let them come and seek you, then knock them silly west. Oh, this old world is 'pleasant, the skies are bright and blue, so never trouble trouble till trouble troubles you!

INCREDIBLE STORY OF WOMAN'S CRIMES.

Paris, March 19.—Police inquiries in the case of the so-called sorceress Enriqueta Marti, who was arrested at Barcelona, charged with abducting two children, is bringing to light almost incredible details of the crime. According to the Journal, the police have now discovered that she abducted and murdered at least six children whose bodies she boiled down to make love philtres. The remains of other children have been found at one of her former residences. A little girl called Angelta, who was rescued from her clutches, says that Marti made her eat the flesh of a child who perished a short time before.
