Using Waste Lumber.

By-Products of Sawmill May Be

Only forty per cent. of our cut timber is utilized; the rest is throws away. This sounds as if we were wilfully wasteful; it means really that the unused sixty per cent. is in such shape that it would not pay to use it. The problem of utilising waste material, we are told by James D. Lacey, writing in the Lacey Tim-ber Digest, is that of making its utilisation profitable. This problem, he says, is being rapidly solved, in the case of timber wastes, by the work of chemists; for chemistry affords the chief key in this instance. The enhanced value of timber to-day is making profitable the conversion of waste into merchantable products hence the activity of those who are studying those products. Not impossibly, Mr. Lacey thinks, the by-products of the sawmill will outvalue, in the near future, the finished lumber. Alcohol, tanning extracts, turpentine, pine oils, fibre for all sorts of fabrics, "wall board," insulating materials-these are but a few of the products that may be obtained from sawmill waste formerly thrown away.

"It is not altogether improbable Lat the time may come when the by-product distillates of wood will rank in value with the product of the co-ordinate sawmill operation. No one knows just when the production of petroleum may begin to fall below the tremendous and constantly increasing demand for oil. Whenever a serious shortage sends oil prices above a certain point, however, ethyl (grain alcohol distilled from wood) will afford an efficient substitute for many purposes for which oil products are now used, including the operation of internal-combustion engines for the automobile and other automotive machinery. Grain alcohol may be produced from any wood at relatively. low cost and by a process which yields other products of value as well. Wood alcohol produced by destructive distillation, is one of the pioneer by-products is increasing rapidly, but for direct use and to serve as a denaturing agent for grain alcohol distilled for industrial use.

"Relatively few of the important chemical by-products can be produced from any one wood. Tanning extracts, for example, are obtained chiefly from the bark of oak and hemlock. Turpentine is reclaimed from those woods possessing the necessary resinous content. Pine oils as the name implies, are produced from the pines. But chemical scrutiny demonstrates that practically every wood possesses important by-product possibilities that may be greatly magnified as experts explore further the field of or ganic chemistry. "During the war the range of byproducts was greatly increased. In Germany fabrics of many varieties were developed and manufactured from wood. Wood fabric rugs and carpets of serviceable character were produced. Bags and sacks, fibre silks, imitation leather, and many other articles of utility found market as substitutes for materials that were no longer obtainable. In the United States, too, recent years have seen remarkable development in the use of wood in manufacture of wall board an industry of great and growing size, and in the production of linoleums, heat-insulating materials, etc. thus creating important industries that are totally dependent on our forests for their primary raw materi-

"Progress is dependent upon the chemist's pioneer work plus commercial development and exploitation that create demand and find markets. Until these things began to be done. the lumber manufacturer necessarily limited his utilization to the conversion of his raw material into lumber and other prmary products which he could make and sell with profit.

"Much of this chemical pioneering has been done, but far more is coming, and as it comes it will steadily cut down the percentage of waste. Less of the tree will be left in the woods to rot. Less will be discarded as valueless at the mill. And a constnatly increasing volume of other products than lumber will develop out of the sawmill industry, with resulting increase in the profits, operation and proportionate enhancement of the value of timber.

"It is not unreasonable to suppose that eventually the value of chemical by-products may very nearly equal the value of the direct products of the sawmill."

Woman Chess Champion

Beginning to play chess when she was twelve years of age, Mrs. A. B. Stevenson now holds the proud position of woman chess champion. She first learned the game from her bro-thers, afterwards joining a club in West Hartlepool, where she beat the majority of opponents. Her successes in various competitions ultimately led to the championship.

Mrs. Stevenson tells an amusing story of an incident which occurred at one of her matches.

"My opponent, an elderly man," she says, "became so absorbed in an interesting game, that when tea was brought in he absentmindedly took up a pawn, instead of a lump of sugar, put it into his cup, and started to stir
