HUNTON'S INHALER CURE; CATARRH.

"Why, what should have made her faint?" innocently exclaimed Miss Lovering, as she came forward and peered curiously into Shirley's white, still face. "It is very strange, isn't it? for the room is certainly very cool and comfortable."

Lord Wallace thought there was a peculiar inflection in her tones, and, glancing keenly into her face, he was sure that it was gleaming with an expression of malicious triumph.

"She has been saying something to wound and insult her, after all," was his inward comment, as he gathered Shirley's slight form closer in his arms and bore her from the room, remarking to madame as he did so:

"I will take her directly upstairs to her own room if you will kindly come with me."

Then he was gone before a crowd could gather about her, and, a few minutes later. Shirley opened her eyes to find herself lying upon the bed in her own chamber, white Madame Marton, Lady Waliace and her son stood over her, applying restoratives and chafing her hands to bring her to herself.

"Oh, Clif!" the girl unconsciously breathed, with a quivering sigh, but no one caught the words save Madame Marton, to whom they were a sudden revelation, and who compressed her thin lips into a line of stern displeasure.

"What did she say?" questioned Lord Wallace in an eager tone.

"I don't know," retorted madame, who was not over-conscientious about stretching the truth a little when it suited her purpose to do so, and of course she was not going to betray Shirley in this delicate matief.

The question and answer served to recall the fair girl more fully to herself, and, lifting her head from the pillow, she flashed a wondering look upon the faces around her and inquired:

"What is the matter? What has happened?"

"The matter is that you are tired out me."
Then he was gone before a crowd could

"The matter is that you are tired out after your trip, and, as soon as you have taken this, I am going to command that you go to bed and sleep quietly until morning," Lord Wallace gently replied, as he held to her lips a restorative which he had prepared.

Shirley smiled feebly, but unhesitatingly drank the potton, and then, with a deep sigh, lay back upon her pillow again.

The young man felt her pulse, after which he gave Madame Marton some directions to follow in case the fainting should return; then, telling her to call upon him if he should be needed, he bade Shirley a kind good-night and left her with the ladies.

Shirley begged Lady Wallace to return to her guests and Madame Marton to accompany her.

"I shall be well enough by myself," she pleaded. "I would rather lie here quietly, just as I am, for awhile, than to go to bed so early."

"Indeed, she felt too utterly wretched and shaken by the agusting nearest."

just as I am, for awhile, than to go to bed so early."

"Indeed, she felt too utterly wretched and shaken by the crushing news she had learned, to make the slightest effort just then—she only wished to be left alone with her grief and pain.

Madame Marton seemed to realize this, and added her entreaties to persuade their hostess to return to the drawing-room, saying that she should also retire presently, and, until she did, would look after Shirley.

Lady Wallace finally yielded, and, after bady Wallace finally yielded, and, after obtaining her promise to call upon her maid if anything should be needed, she bent over Shirley, kissed her softly on the lips and went away.

Tears started to the young girl's eyes at this motherly caress, for no one had kissed her or offered her a caress of any kind since she left New York, and her heart was hungering for some token of affection.

Marton sat down in a low chair by the bed, a thoughtful look on her face.

She had been very much startled by Shirley's swoon, and she could not account for it in any way, until she caught those two half-conscious words the girl had uttered just as she was beginning to members of the court. Judgments were pronounced in a number of cases argued last term, among them the following from Ontario: Ince vs. city of Toronto-Appeal dismissed with costs. Schell vs. Finkle—Appeal allowed in part. McDougall vs. city of Windsor—Appeal dismissed with costs.

She had imagined that Shirley was strengly attracted toward the young man, and she was very sure that he was tast losing his heart to her; so she had told herself that it would be a very delightful arrangement, and one that would serve to keep the girl always near her, if the two should marry and reside at Ivyhurst. the World.

But the startling incident that had just occurred, together with the pain that had betrayed itself in the utterance of those two words, "Oh, Clif!" had opened her eyes to the fact that another romance was likely to interfere with the scheme which had been forming in her fertile brain. Diamond.

which had been forming in her fertile brain.

As she sat there beside Shirley, thinking of this, with a feeling of deep disappointment, a long-drawn sigh from the bed attracted her attention. Glancing at the girl, she saw that her eyes were wide open and staring at the foot-board, a look of dumb misery in them that smote her heart with a keen pain.

As we are aware, Madame Marton was impulsive, and not noted for her tact; so she must not be too severely censured for trying to sift the matter which now troubled her, with her usual bluntness. "Child, what had Clifton Vining to do with your fainting?" she asked, abruptly, but with a note of kindness in her tone. ly, but with a note of kindness in her tone.

Shirley started, and darted a swift, astonished look into the woman's face. Then the hot blood dyed her cheaks and brow with crimson, and all her forced composure gave way.

"Oh!" she cried, throwing out her hands with a gesture of misery, "he has broken my heart!" and then she burst into a flood of passionate weeping.

Madame's thin lips were instantly compressed into a straight, stern line, but by no other sign did she betray that she was moved in the least by that grief-stricken cry. Neither did she attempt to make any reply until Shirley's sorrow had somewhat spent itself; then she remarked, with the same note of gentleness that she had used in speaking before:

"Broken your heart! Humph! Well, that is about what you might expect from most men. Now, child, just dry your tears; shut down the sluice-gates, and tell me all about it, and we'll see exactly how far this thing has gone."

Shirley looked a triffe disturbed at this command, although she could see that madame really felt a kindly interest in her trouble; but it was a delicate subject to discuss, especially so as Blanche Norwood, the girl whom she believed had woman.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER CITY OF PADUCAH

She Sank in Five Minutes After Striking a Snag-Two Persons Drowned and Twenty-two Missing.

St. Louis, Mo., May 14.—A special from Grand Tower, Ill., says: The steamer City of Paducah sank in 25 feet of water Sunday night in less than five minutes after striking a snag, and while backing out from Brunkhorse Landing. The bodies of the two passengers who were drowned of the crew, most of them negroes, are missing. All the officers were saved.

First Mate Tobias Royal, of St.

Louis, says only about twelve passengers were on board and all were saved except two. The body of Dr. J. W. Bell, of Bell's Landing, Tenn., was taken out of his state room. The remains of a young woman, on which was a visiting card reading, "Mrs. Harry L. Allen, 3,430 Eads avenue, St. Louis, Mo.," was recovered from her state room. Two friends traveling with the drowned woman, who start-ed back to St. Louis on the steamer City of Clinton, said that the young lady was engaged to marry Dr. C. A. Meredith, of St. Louis. Several hun-dred dollars' worth of jewelry was found on her body. The passenger list has not been recovered. A diver is searching for it. Only the hurricane deck is above water, which reaches to the skylights of the cabins. All the staterooms are completely filled with water. The steamboat drifted a third of a mile below the landing where she sank.

The first mate says the boat went down within three minutes after striking the snag, He was on the cabin deck and escaped by climbing through the skylight. It is supposed that most of the missing deck hands, who were on the lower deck, were washed down the river. The boat appears to be a total wreck.

Thomas J. Johnston, watchman for the boat, who is said to be among the lost, was 85 years old, and had been a steamboat man for 60 years. He lived in St. Louis.

Early reports sent yesterday said that 35 persons were drowned. STILL ANOTHER STORY.

St. Louis, May 14.-The first authentic information concerning the wreck of the steamer City of Paducah, of the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Company, which occurred at Brunkhorst Landing, Ill., late Sunday night, was obtained upon the arrival of the steamer City of Clifton at this port early today.

FIFTEEN LIVES LOST. Fifteen persons lost their lives in the catastrophe, six whites and nine

The dead: Dr. J. W. Bell, Cuba Landing, Tenn.; Miss Mabel Gardiner, St. Louis; Charles Johnson, aged 84, deck watchman; Frank Gardiner, Texas, tender of Paducah, Ky.; two white firemen, names unknown; Grant Woods, colored, boat baker; and eight colored roustabouts.

The officers acted with coolness, and as the boat settled, helped the pas-sengers to the cabin roof from which the boats were launched.

Miss Mabel Gardiner, of St. Louis, was asleep in her stateroom when the shock came, and probably lost her life by remaining to dress. Her body was found in the forward part of cabin. The body of Dr. Bell has not The older boat thus won the first set | been recovered, and it is supposed he crew and their roustabout helpers, being on the lower deck in the midst of the cargo when the vessel struck, were almost beyond aid, for the steamer careened in settling, the big cargo of sacks of corn shifted, and before the men could escape half of them were pinned down.

The passengers lost all their belongings, and had to be supplied with clothing by those on shore.

INMATES OF THE WOODSTOCK JAIL ESCAPE

Augustus McGuire Coolly Walked Away-Frank O'Neil Gains Freedom.

Woodstock, Ont., May 14.-Frank O'Neil, a prisoner, on Saturday night succeeded in making his escape from the county jail. He was employed in the kitchen and was at work there about 6 o'clock when he decided to carry into action the plan which was to effect his freedom. He went down the cellar from the kitchen and up into the jail proper. Mr. Cameron and Mr. Forbes were both at supper at the time. O'Neil went to the latter's desk, pried it open, and got hold of the turnkey's bunch of keys and his revolver. Armed with the latter, he went to the room where the clothing worn by the prisoners before entering the jail is kept, and took what belonged to him as well as that of the two men sent down with him from Tilsonburg a month ago-Frank Griffin and Edward Smith. He invited them to join him in making his escape, but they declined. O'Neil dressed himself and went down to the office, where he broke open Mr. Cameron's desk and took $4 or $5. He started back for the kitchen by way he had come and let himself out over the iron bars into the yard. It was easy sailing after that, and he was probably some distance from the jail by the time Mr. Forbes was through with his tea, about a quarter of an hour later, and made the discovery of his escape. O'Neil was dressed in a dark suit of clothes and a dark cloth cap. He wore a pair of prison shoes, fastened with a buckle in front. He was sent down with Griffin and Smith a month ago from Tilsonburg, where he had been caught stealing a ride on the M. C. R., evidently being en route to the Pan-American. They were given 40 days each, so that O'Neil had only ten days more to serve. It is supposed that he has gone east, and the au-thorities expect to catch him before the week is up. The trio are all young fellows, about 18 years of age. It was well for the officials that they did not happen to come into the jail at the time O'Neil was at large there for his two companions say that he had the revolver taken from the desk, and told them that if anybody put in an appearance he was going to
