

The ADVERTISER'S PICTORIAL PAGE

Three guesses are allowed to name the institute of which this is the main door. No, it is not the portal of a great university, but the entrance to Toronto's jail.

Judge John Bassett Moore, president of the world court, with Mrs. Moore and their daughter, are seen on their return to America after a lengthy stay abroad.

The familiar sight during the summer of cricketers on the back campus of the University of Toronto will soon be superseded by crowds of student rugby enthusiasts cheering their teams to victory.

And his name is Tom Thumb, and although he is eight years old, he is the smallest equine in the world. He weighs only seventy-six pounds.

These young lads exemplify the typical curiosity of children as they stop in their play to explore the cellar of a fruit store. Yes, there are no bananas?

Working himself through high school via the newspaper selling route, this Massachusetts lad expects to make his way through Harvard University in a like manner.

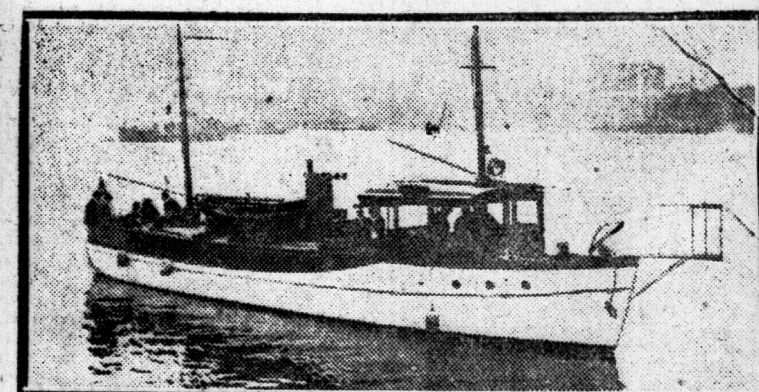

King Alfonso of Spain has found a new recreation. He is seen in the Mountains of Santander with his party on a bear-hunting expedition.

Captain George Cleveland is making his first visit to civilization after ten years spent as head of the Hudson Bay Company in the far north. He rarely saw a white man during that time.

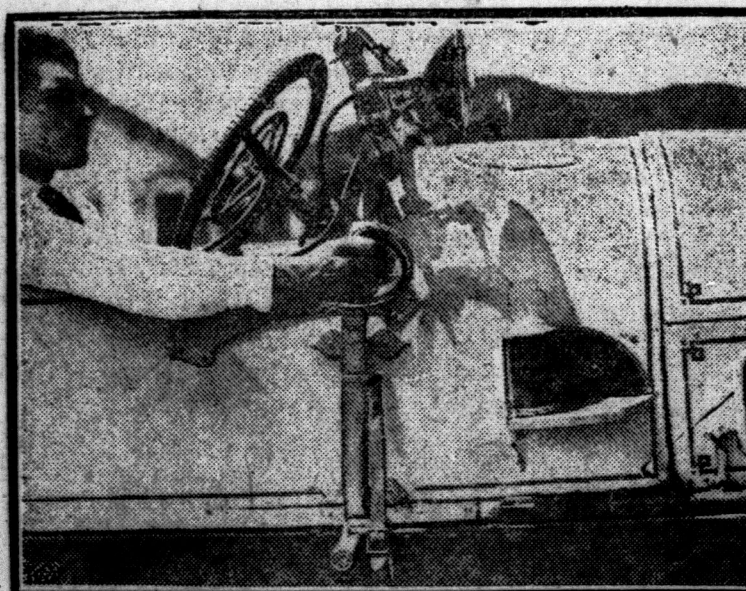

One of the United States army balloons which was struck by lightning, killing the two pilots, during the Gordon Bennett cup events at Brussels, Belgium, is shown. The start was made during a severe storm.

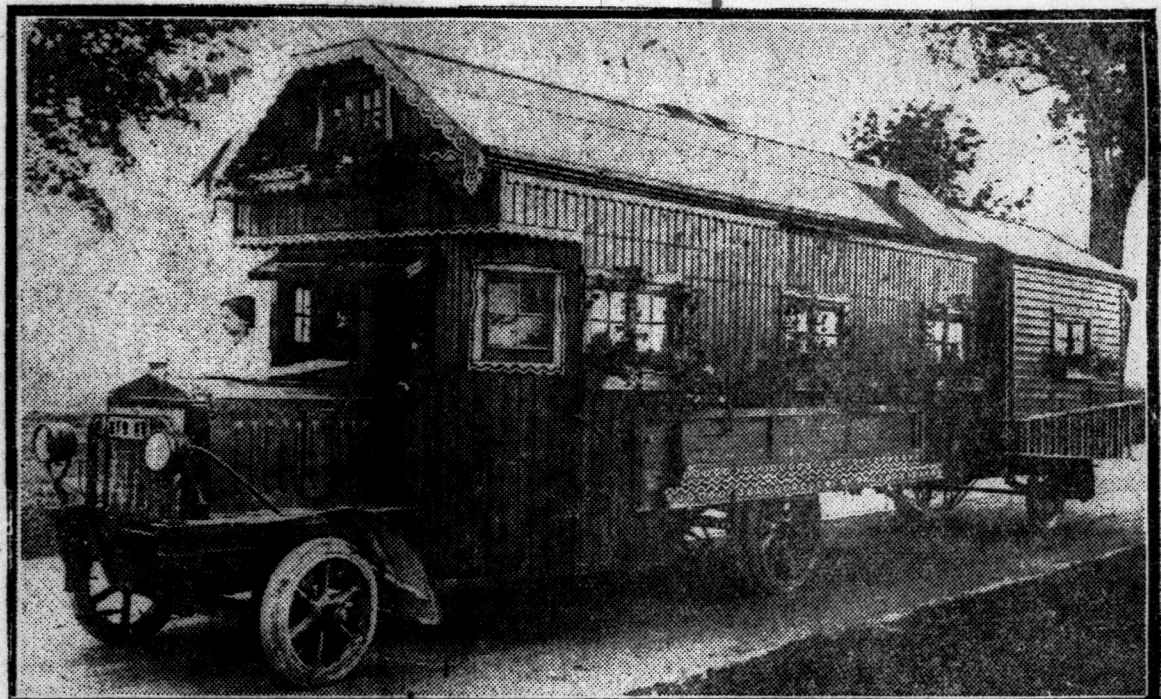

Following in the wake of the radio-controlled boat comes a novel yacht, which has for its feature a control from the bridge by a set of push buttons. The electrically manipulated vessel is acclaimed a success.

If you keep a thing long enough it is bound to come in useful, says this vegetable vendor, who is now employing his old gramophone horn to announce his wares.

Father's historic sword has lost all its glory by being used as a brake handle on his young offspring's speed car.

An Austrian nobleman and his family make a living by selling candy from this traveling sweet shop. The front portion is used as living quarters, while on the rear is attached the store.

George Cummings of England may not be as strong as a horse, but he is faster. In a walking race of thirty-four miles he beat an animal by one hour and twenty minutes.

The feast of Bacchus, a pagan festival of thanksgiving, held in honor of the god Bacchus for the successful harvest, has been revived in Philadelphia. Photograph shows one of the dancing girls.