The one in which the fames were first discovered contained a large quantity of cotton belonging to Messrs. Jas. Brown, Messrs. Molyneux, Witterby and Co. and Messrs. Wilds, Pickersgill & Co besides. 2,200 bales of wool. The second was filled luable than the first, the great bulk of it being composed of East India produce, consisting of indigo, shumac, pepper, gums, sago, and saltpetre. The property destroyed by this catastrophe is estimated at £60,000: The cost of the two warehouses will proba-

A Correspondent of the London Chronicle has furnished that Journal with the following commentary on the noble and learned ex-Chancellor: SONG OF OLD PUCK.

Who wants Old Puck ?- for here am I, Who wants Old Puck?—for here am I,
A mongrel imp, 'twixt earth and sky,
Ready alike to crawl or fly;
Now in the mud, now in the air,
And, so 'tis for mischief, reckless where.
As to my knowledge, there's no end to't,
For, where I haven't it, I pretend to't
And 'stead of taking a learned degree
At seme dull University,
Puck found it handier to commence
With a certain degree of impudence,
Which passes one off as learned and clever,
Beyond all other degrees whatever;

Whose head's so full of all sorts of wares,
That a brother imp, old Smogden, swears,
