Round Hill School Fair

Friday, Sept. 18th, was a gala day in Round Hill. Shortly after noon, the procession to the schoolhouse began. The visitor who inquired the meaning of it all was joyfully informed by the happy children, proud of the feeling of ownership, that 'This is OUR Exhibition Day.'

'Like all new things, the interest at first was small, but as the exhibition date drew near, the enthusiasm of the children became contagious, spreading to both old and young. As a result, Sept. 18th was practically a public holiday.

The value of the Fair can scarcely be estimated. It gave the children an interest in school activities that nothing else could. How eagerly the children announced to their parents, 'I have won a prize!'

Next followed an extremely bright, interesting and practical paper on the value of School Fairs by Mrs. Wiltshire. Comment here is unnecessary, as we understand the paper will be published in full.

J. B. Hall, Lawrencetown. His address was certainly inspiring. He deprecated the common notion that schools should train children for the professions.

He very properly and very forcibly affirmed that the duty of the school was not to make lawyers, doctors or preachers, but to make MEN and WOMEN.

A pleasing feature of the exhibition was the fact that teachers from Annapolis and Lawrencetown were sufficiently interested to attend. This means that the progressive teachers from a district covering twenty miles look an active interest in the Round Hill Exhibition.

German Counter-attacks are "Death Spasms of Despair"

PARIS, Sept. 18.—A description of the fighting by the Allies left near Noyon, given by a French infantry Captain who was disabled by a rifle bullet in the shoulder last Thursday, and who reached Paris this afternoon, leaves no doubt that this was the most important battle of the war.

The German entrenchments all along the line are most formidable. They extend in three parallel rows over a metre deep, communicating by underground passages intersecting them. At intervals of twenty metres they are roofed with solid doorms of houses covered with earth.

Next followed an extremely bright, interesting and practical paper on the value of School Fairs by Mrs. Wiltshire. Comment here is unnecessary, as we understand the paper will be published in full.
