was a general rumour that some important places had declared for the junta at Oporto. The position of the hostile forces was such as rendered it likely an important action would soon take place between the Conde das Antas and Baron Casal. By the latest accounts, Casal had withdrawn his troops from Valencia The sum truly and Vi and Vianna, and had taken up a defensive position on the Lima.
Saldanha's head-quarters were still at Agneda, and one of his Columns, 1,000 strong, was in pursuit of Porvoss, who was in the Estrella mountains. The whole Miguelite force, under Bernardino, 800 strong, had joined Vasconcellos, and several hundred Miguelites, the remains of Macdonnell's band, had found their way to Antas's camp, where they met a cordial reception. Several deserters from Salnanha's army, it is said, had presented themselves at Oporto.

RUTTAN'S INVENTION .- We have much pleasure in giving the benefit of our circulation to the following notice which we find in the British Canadian of Saturday last, of an ingenious invention which promises to be highly successful and serviceable. "We have been favoured with an inspection of serviceable. "We have been favoured with an inspection of the warm air apparatus, the invention of Mr. Sheriff Ruttan, of Cobourg, lately erected in Macdonald's Hotel, King-street, and were happy to find that on trial the result surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the ingenious inventor. The economy of this most useful piece of furniture, consists in its serving all the purposes of a cooking stove, at the same time that it diffuses a free and healthy warmth throughout the house. The furnace is constructed on a new principle, being diamond-shaped, so that every portion of the iron is thoroughly heated, with the consumption of but a small quantity of wood. A current of fresh air is brought from an area out-side the building, formed by an upright funnel some ten feet in height, and six or seven feet in breadth at the top, from which a strong draught passes through a channel to the apparatus, and entering a cham-Passes through a channel to the apparatus, and entering a chamber surrounding the furnace becomes heated, and then passes up through tin channels to the rooms, where it diffuses a genial warmth, and all the advantage of fresh air is gained, in which the use of the invention is very great; the great evil of the common hot-air furnaces now in use being, that the same air is kept heated, and breathed over and over again in the rooms. The mechanism which enables the apparatus to be used for cooking without in any manner interrupting the other purpose, is remarkably ingenious, and the whole is well deserving of inspection by those of our readers who may be fortunate enough to have the content of the cont to have the opportunity. Mr. Ruttan has patented his remarkable and useful invention."

IMPORTANT INVENTION .- HOT AIR STOVE .- We were MPORTANT INVENTION.—HOT AIR STOVE.—We were much gratified by an inspection of a Hot Air and Cooking Stove combined, which has recently been put up in McDonald's Hotel, King Street, under the direction of the inventor and patentee, Mr. Sheriff Ruttan, of Cobourg. The purity and quantity of the heat produced by this stove must be witnessed to be believed. The cold air is received from a large conical tank and the building on the principle of a windnessed to be believed. The cold air is received from a large conical tank outside the building, on the principle of a wind-sail in ships, and is conveyed from thence to the stove by a moden flue, where, becoming heated, it ascends into a hot air chamber of tin, fixed above or enclosing the stove, and from themee is disseminated through all parts of the house by square in flues. The air received from the outside passes with such rapidity through the stove, that the oxygen is not destroyed, which is the case more or less in all self-acting hot air stoves, which is the case more or less in all self-acting hot air stoves, and in the consumption of fuel and consequently labour in large establishments (particularly when that fuel ranges so high a price as it has done this winter in Toronto), is a design fauture recommending strongly its adoption for any building, earlier of or warming churches, large public buildings, and manufactories of all kinds, where heat with perfect safety and economy is required. At a future period, we shall enter more fally into a description of its operation. A CHILD KILLED. -INQUEST. - (Bayfield, Huron Dist.) On the 19th instant, an inquest was held by George ster, Eag, of Goderich, Coronor, and Jury, at the village of d, who was killed under the following circumstances:—Mr. William Armstrong, of Bayfield, was out chopping on the park lots, near the village, and was accompanied by his little boy.—
The mother wanted the boy, and sent her daughter Margaret, a child five years old, to call him. The father had just been chopping. chopping a tree, and it was beginning to crack, a sign always of a tree being near falling, when he heard his daughter singing innocently near the spot, but did not see her, though he heard her call her brother. The tree fell at this moment, and the bush of bush of the top struck her in its fall, and inflicted a slight wound The boy then called to his father, after the tree fell, that his sister was killed, when they ran and found the little innocent lying lying quite dead, behind another tree, to which she had appaty ran for shelter. We are led into these remarks from the circumstance of an enterprising house at Belleville having purchased the Queen Steamer, formerly owned by Capt. Richardson. It was notified a short time ago, that she was to run between Kingston and Belleville, touching at Picton. Public notice is now given, that as soon as the navigation opens, she will commence her trips—Downwards, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Upwards, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. She has ample steerage for large quantities of flour or other produce.

Her Captain, Edward Harrison, favourably known in this town, will endeavour to render every facility to Commerce and to passengers.

As Picton and Belleville are becoming daily of more importance, there is no doubt but a very extensive business will be carried on the ensuing summer, more especially when the Steam Mills come into full operation. This event will tempt the Farmers located at the Western part of the district to convey their grain and produce to Picton, where they will more than be repaid for their trouble by the extra prices they will obtain, in addition to the facilities of transportation about to be afforded.

We have not yet been informed what other vessels will be placed on this route, but there will doubtless be others to compete with the Commercial Advertiser.

that the unfortunate gentleman had no personal enemies who could be the authors of this shocking crime. That the ruffians who perpetrated this assault had a deliberate purpose to mur-der some one is evident from the fact that they had searched several sleighs which went along the road during the course of the evening, and that after the consummation of their crime they watched the body, believing their deadly purpose effected, in order that no assistance should be rendered to their victim. It appears that a shot was fired at Mr. Hervieux in the first instance, and that, that gentleman, astonished no doubt, at such an attempt on his life, instead of instantly shooting the assassin which he ought to have done, stopped to parley with him, and thus allowed the other ruffians to come up behind him. Mr. Hervieux it appears had been attacked by a large dog belonging to a farm house on the road, a night or two before, which tor off the leg of his trowsers, and he had put a pistol in his pocket with the intention of shooting the dog, if it attacked him again.

Mr. Hervieux must have lain about three hours on the ground before he was picked up—his hair was frozen to the ground in the blood that had poured from his wounds in his head and neck.—The Minerve states that it is feared his hands and feet are so badly frozen that amputation will be necessary, even should the unfortunate gentleman recover from the injuries done to his head.
