

Other questions raised in the House related to specifics of the Canadian position on carbon dioxide emissions, the biodiversity treaty and the government's commitment to following up its initial commitments.⁸ On 7 May 1992, a special debate on the Canadian position at UNCED occurred in the House of Commons. The debate was a lengthy and wide-ranging one involving a large number of MPs. Discussion of many of the issues relating to the environment and sustainable development took place, including the relationship between the government's position on these international issues and its position on related domestic questions.⁹
