sentiments with which he suffered for the sins of the world: endure your illness with patience and resignation to the will of God, as a penance justly due to your offences; and while I apply this sacred unction to your eyes, your ears and your other senses, implore with a contrite and humble heart the foregiveness of all those sins, which through any of these avenues may have made their way into your soul.

TO THOSE WHO ARE PRESENT.

You, my dear brethren, who are to witness this solemn ceremony, let your presence be of some avail to our suffering friend. Unite your prayers with those which the Church offers up in his behalf, and do for him what you would rejoice to have done for yourselves, were you in a similar situation. For this purpose you may recite the Litany of the Saints, or other prayers according to your devotion.
