Rev. Dr. Thomas entered on his twentieth year as pastor of the Jarvis-street Baptist Church yesterday. At the morning service he spoke about the flourishing condition of the church, and also referred to the good feeling which existed through the congregation. Mr. Vogt, the organist, was favorably mentioned by the pastor, as also was the choir.

A large number of people were turned away in the evening, the large edifice being crowded to the doors. The preacher took for his subject: "A Grath, 17 ft. 6 in., 2.

Halifax, Oct. 13.—Mr. Leroy Willis, a member of the Cape Breton Yacht Club, to night gave some details of the plan of Canadian yachtsmen to challenge for the America's Cup.

"The question of building a yacht at Sydney to challenge for the cup has been mooted for some time," he said. "The idea originated with members of the Cape Breton Yacht Club, among whom are Mr. A. J. Moxham, Mr. Cornelius Shields, Mr. H. J. Whitney connected with coal and steal bers. "The plan of Sight, each going at least 100 feet over the grand stand, and another onto the roof. J. Workam, Mr. Cornelius Shields, Mr. H. M. Whitney, connected with coal and steel R Mr. Ross is very enthusiastic over the

Mr. Ross is very enthusiastic over the matter and has aiready subscribed largely toward the project. There are besides two other prominent Montreal capitalists who are wilking to contribute largely. The Cape Breton Yacht Club will materially assist in the scheme. All of these are unanimous in favor of building a boat designed by G. H. Duggan.

"No definite formal decision has been arrived at by the Cape Breton Club, but the outlook is exceedingly encoaraging."

Mr. Duggan does not think it impossible to design and construct a yacht in Canyin better than any that has yet sailed for the cup, but he thinks that the absence of a capable crew would be the chief difficulty. It would take, he says, two years to train a crew thoroly, and a larsery must be certablished.

Qualities of Greatness.

Frince George has appealed to the popular imagination as representing those principles that have made the country and the Empire great and influential. It is not territory that makes a nation great. It is not mountains and valleys, lotests and pairies, fortified cifies and treasures of bond and sliver that make a nation strong. It is rather the quanty of its life, the purity of its ideals, the moral value of its principles. What would the national life of England be without messe:

Particular is loyalty to an ideal. The great Empire over which Edward VII. reigns stands for just laws, for freedom of thought, and, as far as "Canada is concerned, for religious equality. It these great principles were not respected and upheld, we would not be loyal. If the king proved recreant to the constitution by which our rights and privileges are conserved, then we would prove recreant to him. True patriotism has regard to principles, not men. of a capable crew would be the chief difficulty. It would take, he says, two years to train a crew thoroty, and a ansery must be established.

Mr. Ross, who is a leading member of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club, is in Cape Breton. He is accompanied by Mr. Duggan of Montreal, designer of all the successful Seawanhaka cup defenders. Mr. Ross and other prominent yachtsmen are strongly in favor of building a yacht, designed by Mr. Duggan, to challenge for the America's Cup, believing that the Canadlan designer can succeed where Englishmen have failed.

Principles to Respect.

In a representative government like that of Englind, the King stands for the noblest and best life of the people as it has been crystalized in principles which enders and in a highly developed national character. The throne to which if yield allegiance must represent the principles which command my respect and homage. There have been times in English history when the best patriotism of the land held the throne in abhorrence. Cromwell was as true a patriot as the centuries produced. The Pilgrim Fathers were patriots who would have willingly died to save their country from despotism and degradation. Our forfathers in the faith against whom the maledictions of the throne were freely hurled, were patriots. Patriotism rightly so-called is devotion to an ideal in which the principles of right counsess, justice and equality are embodied. When those who assume to represent that dieal prove recreant to their trust, loyalty is a thing impossible.

loved for her many virtues as well as for the absolute constitutionality of her administration. Edward VII. has been introduced into a heritage of power and influence which no other living man has enjoyed, and he promises to use them in such a way as to command the confidence and affection of his subjects. The reception which the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York have received in this and other lands has had in it all the eclat and magnificence of a triumphal procession. There certainly has been no waning of the popular interest in constitutional monarchy, and there will not be as long as the throne J. Frank Monck, Hamilton, chairman; John R.
