********** EXTRAORDINARY STORY.

The most surprising circumstance connected with the extraordinary story of a Japanese attack on Port Arthur on the night of July 11, and its repulse at a cost to them of 30,000 men, is that Admiral Alexieff should have officially telegraphed to St. Petersburg a report of such a nature derived from "Japanese sources." What these sources are he does not indicate, and it is therefore impossible to judge of the degree of credibility to be attached to it. But, judging from past experences, it is much more likely that the Japanese authors of the information are is much more likely that the Japanese authors of the information are doing a bit of hocus-pocus than making use of the Russian viceroy as a disseminator of authentic news. In its first form the story was apocryphal in the highest degree, and the amended version is only slightly less improbable. The Japanese have not hitherto been guilty of recklessly squandering their armies in such an impossible attempt as the figures indicate. Besides 30,000 troops aligned before an invested fortress occupy a considerable extent of ground, and to destroy such a number by means of mines would be an achievement possible perhaps in fiction, but almost inconceivable in real warfare. In default, therefore, of confirmation from Japanese official sources it will be well to treat the report with a certain saving amount of skepticism. If the Japanese authorities desired to acquaint the nations of such a mishap, they would not have done so thru Admiral Alexieff.

It is sume as the contract made with Mis Japanese authorities desired to acquaint the nations of such a mishap, they would not have dorie so thru Admiral Alexieff.

On land the Japanese continue steadily to advance northward and westward, pushing the Russian forces before them. Their immediate objective is apparently Newchwang. So far they do not seem to contemplate any invasion of Manchuria, which would carry them away from their base of operations and deprive them of the advantages they now power at $6 a borse-power a year, and lights at 30 cents a light, and for a ferm of 25 years.
