ROME, Jan. 25.—In the hall of the consistory this morning the Pope read the decree approving the solemn beamfication of Joan of Arc.

In his address, the Pope said that he was never so satisfied as when, thru the help of God, he was able to raise to the altars those who, leaving on earth the perfume of their virtues, show with the assistance of the Almighty, the miracles of heaven.

His Holiness also took occasion to complain of the present condition of

A large, fashionable and musical audience greeted Madame Marchesi and Miss Gertrude Huntley last night at Massey Hall. Madame Marchesi was beautiful in a gown of ivory chiffon, interwoven with a silver thread, mountinterwoven with a sliver thread, mounted on pink satin, and caught up in empire style at the back. The neck was ornamented with rich white fringe, and outlined with a broad band of exquisite iridescent sequin that fell to the bottom of the tunic chiffon robe, and ran round the lower edge of the skirt. A long chain of diamonds, some diamond and sapphire ornaments diamond rings, earrings and a band of diamonds in the hair increased still further the beauty of her apparel. In striking contrast to this prima donna, Miss Gertrude Huntley appeared in almost girlish simplicity. A short semi-empire gown of soft pink satin, with a garniture of lace and pastel shades on the bodice, and her dark hair coiled in low, becoming style. That the audience was not and her dark hair coiled in low, becoming style. That the audience was not disappointed in the artists was evidenced by the rapturous applause which succeeded in eliciting several encores. Madame Marchesi was the recipient of a huge cluster of pink carnations, and Miss Huntley's friends rewarded her with six large and beautiful bouquets. Among those present were: Lady Mortimer Clark, Miss Elise Clark, Lady Moss, Miss Moss, Mrs. Albert Gooderham, Lady Falconbridge, Mrs. Cawthra, Mulock, Lady Whitney, Mrs. Cawthra, Mulock, Lady Whitney, Mrs. Bengough, Mr. and Mrs. Byron Walker, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Houston, Monsieur and Madame Rochereau de la Sabliere and Mr. and Mrs. Flavelle.

At the Princess.

It is safe to say that within the past decade at least, few plays have been appeal to the very wellsprings of the human sympathles as does "The Great Divide," in which the sterling actors, Henry Miller, and an admirable company of players, appeared at the Princess last night. It is a tale of the arid plains of Arizona and of the mighty Rocky Mountain range, but—the environment is, after all, only incidental to the great central theme, the strugtle of a husband to win the sympathy and affections of her whom he has possessed by force. The audience is at first inspired only by the feelings of repulsion, which make the martyrdom of the woman seem almost unbearable, but as realization grows of the remendous odds araranyed against him, and of innate qualities unsuspected at the beginning, there is a transition of sentiment, leaving nothing but the ardent wish that he may win.

The plot may be sketched briefly, Philip Jordan and his two sisters, Ruth and Polly, have gone to virile Arizona from commonplace Massachusetts, twoso fortune in rancing. Ruth, a charming, unspoiled young girl, is, thru and polly, have gone to virile Arizona from commonplace Massachusetts, twoso fortune in rancing. Ruth, a charming unspoiled young girl, is, thru and polly, have gone to virile Arizona from commonplace Massachusetts, twoso fortune in rancing. He doesso, and the compact is made complete by their marriage and flight to his cabin in the Rockies. The remainder of the story deals with his gradual awakening of character, and his triumph over seemingly insuperable obstacles.

Mr. Miller, in the part of Stephen Ghent, the husband, gives a masterly for the process of the men less brutal of a structure of delightful companions for any time. He doesso, and the compact is made complete by their marriage and flight to his cabin in the Rockies. The remainder of the story deals with his gradual awakening of character, and his triumph over seemingly insuperable obstacles.

Mr. Miller, in the part of Stephen Ghent, the husband, gives a masterly characterization. His portrayal shows careful repression and infinite care in avoiding anything savoring of the tawdry. There is not a touch of false sentiment, nor the vestige of an appeal to the emotions not thoroly justified by the untending requirements of the part. It is a living presentment, and Mr. Miller must be credited with a notable achievement. The cast is uniformly good, but especial mention should be made of the manner in which Miss Thairs Lawton makes a flesh-and-blood creature of Ruth Jordan. The emotional demand is considerable, but Miss Lawton does not overact tho perhaps her most effective work is in the happier lines.

The first burletta is a mirth-provokeding act describing the adventures of "The Wise Guy." This difficult part is well acted by Edmund Hays, who is ably supported by the burlesque idol, Beatrice Harlow, and Mike Judge. In this act the Three Judges do many fine acrobatic stunts, while Doherty and Harlow give the way they think the Merry Widow waltz is danced in variations countries.

Harrison Grey Fiske has sent out a company of exceptional merit, headed by George Arliss, who, in the title role, gives an entirely original consception of the tempter—not the intellectual spirit that denies—but of the tempter who always appears at the opportune moment.
