IS IT A STRUGGLE FOR ATHLETIC CONTROL?

Two Amateur Bodies Now in United States—The New Federation

(New York Evening Post.)
It is the belief of those who are conversant with the athletic situation that a bitter struggle for the control of amateur sport in America is about to be staged. The two factions are the Amateur Athletic Union, on one side and the recently formed National Amateur Athletic Federation on the other.
The A. A. U., in supreme command since the days of the late Jim Sullivan, controls amateur athletics, which includes participation in the Olympic games, although this branch is handled directly by the American Olympic Association. The federation was formed six months ago for the purpose of promoting athletics, and has among its members the Army and the National Lawn Tennis Association, the combined Y. M. C. A.'s and National Collegiate Athletic Association. The latter named is regarded as a rival organization to the Amateur Athletic Union, which controls the college championships.
At the annual meeting of the American Olympic Association, held recently at Washington, the Federation was admitted. It was understood that the Federation would undertake to promote athletics along a line that would not conflict with the A. A. U.
Last week the Federation announced that it would hold sectional championships in track and field. This brought a protest from the A. A. U., and it appears that there is bound to be a bitter struggle before the matter is straightened out. Should the Federation encroach on the A. A. U., the latter is sure to fight, as one of its officials recently said, "for our very existence."
The Federation has not yet made clear its plans, and it is quite possible that this organization will proceed along constructive lines in perfect harmony with the A. A. U. In order to do so, however, it will have to forego any thought of holding sectional or national championships, according to the opinion of officials in the present controlling body.

YES-MEN.

(Vancouver World.)
One of the best slang phrases ever invented is "yes-men." A "yes-man" is a fellow who always agrees with whatever is proposed, particularly when the proposal is made by his boss or anyone else with whom he seeks to win favor.
There's a "yes-man" in every office, every factory, every social gathering, every home.
The "yes-man" follows the line of

FIFTEEN MINUTES OF RADIO EACH DAY

Lesson No. 199
REGENERATIVE RECEPTION AND AMPLIFICATION.

Regeneration, as developed by Armstrong, provides a valuable means of obtaining increased strength of radio signal by reinforcing the original oscillation through the application of an amplified oscillation. If a circuit employing regeneration is combined with one or more stages of audio-frequency amplification a very satisfactory arrangement is thus provided for obtaining considerable magnification of signals at short wave lengths.

There are several methods in general use for obtaining regeneration by use of the feedback circuit whereby a portion of the energy of the plate circuit is fed back and utilized to reinforce the radio oscillations in the grid circuit. Two of these methods are, namely, the "tickler circuit" and the "tuned plate circuit." In the tickler circuit, regeneration is obtained by connecting a tickler coil in the plate circuit and transferring the tickler coil in the plate circuit to the grid circuit by placing the tickler coil in inductive relation to the secondary circuit. An example of the "tuned plate circuit" is shown in the accompanying diagram.

The antenna circuit, in this case, includes in addition to the antenna, the series condenser (C-1) and the primary coil (L) of a standard variocoupler. Both these elements being variable for proper adjustment to the desired wave length. The secondary coil (L-1) of the variocoupler, the grid variometer (V-1) and a proper grid condenser and leak are connected in the grid circuit of the detector tube (D). In the plate circuit of this tube is connected the plate variometer (V-2). In the primary coil of the voltage amplifying transformer (T) and approximately 18 volts of the plate circuit, this eliminating the choking effect of the primary coil of the amplifying transformer.
Amplification in the circuits of the first tube is obtained by means of grid and plate circuits. A maximum strength of signal may then be obtained by varying the position of the sliding contact. In order to secure amplification without distortion it is necessary to maintain the grid of each amplifier tube at a small negative potential with respect to the filament so that operation of the tube on a desirable portion of the grid voltage plate current curve is obtained.

This result is accomplished by inserting a grid bias or "C" battery consisting of a few cells of the flashlight type, in the grid circuit of each amplifier tube, with the negative terminal of the battery connected to the grid. The positive terminal of the battery is connected to the filament. A transmitting station is not powerful enough to be detected, these feeble impulses may be built up to a strength sufficient to properly operate the detector by inserting one or more stages of radio-frequency amplification between the antenna and the detector.

"Many tree-owners do not realize the importance of regularly inspecting their trees. Immediate attention to new injuries, or to any defects that may appear in repair work already done, will reduce materially the time, labor and cost that will be required to make these repairs later. Too often the owner believes that, having paid the repair bills, his tree cares are over for all time. Unfortunately, this is seldom the case, for tree repairs are something like dental repairs. In both, frequent inspection and prompt attention will do much to prevent extensive repairs and large bills."—Tree-Repairing, Bulletin No. 75, Forestry Branch, Ottawa.

INFLUENCE OF SPORT ON YOUNG

Deplores Effect of Professionalism and "Win-at-any-cost" Spirit.

(Sussex Record.)

On its editorial page The Winnipeg Tribune publishes a very timely article dealing with the influence of sport on the rising generation. The Tribune deplores the effect of professionalism and the "win-at-any-cost" spirit, which is regarded in too many quarters as a standard up to which to live, or more properly speaking, play. The editorial is, in part, as follows:—

Hundreds of hockey teams made up of youngsters of the teen age are taking the ice these days for the winter's sport. How many of them will play for the sake of the sport, and will resolutely put away the idea of winning at any cost, by fair means or foul?

The idea of playing always to win, and that anything is justified that helps to win, has gripped the mind of young Canada. Little as we may like it, the fact is that the ideas dominating sport in Canada today are the product of professionalism, and they go to destroy at least half the value of the sport to the boys engaging in it.

The standards of men engaged in sport as a trade or profession are not of the highest. A financial premium is placed upon winning, which immediately takes the element of sport out of the game. Recently Winnipeg has had the opportunity of witnessing several professional hockey teams in action. As demonstrations of skill in close competition they were excellent, but the element of sport was not there. Good sportsmanship was lacking except in rare instances, and the occasional exhibitions of it were all too infrequent to redeem the performances as a whole.

Championship cups in the hockey leagues which young boys are playing should be awarded, not to the team successful in winning most games, but to the team that in victory or defeat showed the best sportsmanship. Trying hard to win fairly, but winning or losing with equally good grace, is decidedly more admirable than winning by tactics savoring in any degree of the unfair. England holds few world's sporting championships, but she has the fairest crown jewels of all—the championship in good sportsmanship.

It is a matter for school principals and teachers for officials of boys' leagues, for all who in any way have leadership of boys in sport, and for parents. The change in the ideal of a day, but by persistent sportsmanship, not winning, can be put first in all our sport and athletics and through these in our Canadian life.

The age-old question of amateurism, professionalism, and the fine line dividing them, gave cause for debate in the recent A. A. C. meeting held in Montreal.

The Ontario scheme limiting southerners to a maximum of $100 value was put through, but many of the delegates opposed it.

There was one outstanding feature of the A. A. U. meeting at Montreal. The Olympic committee will send to Paris in 1924 only those athletes who are considered to have a fair chance of securing a medal for Canada.

All the sentiment of the Olympic committee, which convened after the A. A. U. C. gathering, was in favor of an immediate start on proceedings towards the selection of a team, and the feeling in the direction of sending only those athletes with a real chance to score points was the general sense.

GAINED 65 POUNDS!

"Five years ago when I was first married, I had wonderful energy. I could be on the go all day long without feeling the least bit tired. I had a great appetite and could eat anything. I weighed 147 pounds. I used to be busy every minute of the day and, when the day was over, I could go to bed and never waken once during the night. Thirteen months ago my first baby was born. After that my energy seemed to leave me. I was tired all the time. I had to force myself to do my household duties. Instead of being a pleasure as formerly, these duties became a real task. I lost all desire for food and nothing would tempt me. I had to make myself eat. I would go to bed at night and toss from side to side for hours as a time. After a while I would doze off only to find that I had been sleeping for ten or fifteen minutes. Naturally when morning came, not having slept, I started the day completely tired out. I was shaky and nervous. The least noise would startle me and make my heart race along. I could see that my husband was worried. I was losing weight every week and had already lost 54 pounds. I tried all kinds of tonics, but they didn't help me. One night, a night I shall never forget because it started me on the way to health and happiness again, my husband brought in a bottle of Carnal. A friend told him that Carnal had saved his wife's life, so he insisted upon my trying it. Six weeks signed. I had gained all the time. I had to force myself to do my household duties. A friend told him that Carnal had saved his wife's life, so he insisted upon my trying it. Six weeks signed. I had gained all the time. I had to force myself to do my household duties. Instead of being a pleasure as formerly, these duties became a real task. I lost all desire for food and nothing would tempt me. I had to make myself eat. I would go to bed at night and toss from side to side for hours as a time. After a while I would doze off only to find that I had been sleeping for ten or fifteen minutes. Naturally when morning came, not having slept, I started the day completely tired out. I was shaky and nervous. The least noise would startle me and make my heart race along. I could see that my husband was worried. I was losing weight every week and had already lost 54 pounds. I tried all kinds of tonics, but they didn't help me. One night, a night I shall never forget because it started me on the way to health and happiness again, my husband brought in a bottle of Carnal.
