THE DEAF AND DUMB, AND THE BLIND.

"Who hath made the dumb or deaf or the blind? have not I the Lord?"—Exod. ix. 11.

ALL praise and glory be to Him Who shed on earth Compassion's tear— Who made the wand'ring blind to see— The dumb to speak—the deaf to hear.

No longer shall the mute be still; Here,—signs significant of sense Shall breathe the language of the soul, In strains of voiceless eloquence

No longer shall the blind remain Unclothed, unlettered, and unled: Here shall we find a safe retreat, To earn and eat our daily bread.

Ours shall sweet communion be, Though lost to hearing,—voice, and sight: Our very sympathies shall aid— Our very wants shall us unite.

All praise and glory be to Him Who thus hath opened up a way, And brought so many bounteous friends To witness this rejoicing day.

Our hearts with gratitude we raise: This stone shall our memorial be; All glory be to Him who made The deaf to hear,—the blind to see!

THE BLIND.

"And He took the blind man by the hand."—Mark viii. 23.

THEY tell us that the stars are bright, Which glisten in the sky: But vain they shed their leav'nly light Upon the sightless eye.

They tell us of the tints of morn— Hues of the purple West, The blossom of the snowy thorn, The ocean's sparkling breast.

The sun that ushers in the day— The moon so fair and clear,— Shed not upon our eyes a ray. To lighten or to cheer.

But He who made the sun and moon, Earth—ocean—air—and sky, Hath poured upon our clouded noon The Day-Spring from on high.

Our hands can read, our fingers trace* The page of truth and love; And thus we joyfully embrace The message from above.

Then let us willingly record His praise, who maketh known To our benighted hearts His word, And seals it as His own.

SONNET.

My lady love, my lady love! Graceful and fair as 'he turtle dove! Gentle and kind, how I love to press Thy sylph like form to my throbbing breast,

And to taste with pure ecstatic bliss The soul of love in thy balmy kiss: 'Tis the nearest approach to happiness That an earthly mortal can e'er possess. My lady love, thou'rt pure and bright As the gay and glorious orb of night, More fair than the cygnet's wing of snow;

Thy cheek, possessing the bean-tious glow That tints the morn, when the sun's first ray Sweeps the grey veil of twilight away.

Forms such as thine were created to bless Our dreary sojourn in life's wilderness, My lovely one, my spirit soars When thinking of these to those blest shores,

Where angels of light their tribute bring In songs of praise to their heavenly king, And joyfully tune, with fervent zeal, Their golden harps to the swelling peal.

Oh that together when this life is done, We may share such bliss in the world to come!

HUNGARIAN WAGGONERS.—The Hungarian teams of oxen are driven by a race of men the most picturesque in the wild and savage-looking line imaginable.—Their dress is made wholly of sheep skins, with the wool on, and in many the collars and seams are ornamented with a sort of savage embroidery, very like that of the North American Indians.

There has been a very prevalent rumour for some days, that Lord Binger has expressed a disposition to resign his office of Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, in favour of his son-in-law, the Attorney-General.
