The Grandsire of Wisdom.

A gray-haired grandsire took a child And set her on his knee; He talked to her of things that are And things that ought to be. And these the words the old man spake Earnestly as he could: "This sife is what we make it, if We try to make it good." Oats, Ontarlo, ⁴ Provincial, Split Peas, Pot Barley, Hay, pressed,

"We live in fear of failure if We seek for fame and weakh; Our plans may work out poorly when Our only hope is health. But hife is full of sweetness if We all do as we should— For hife is what we make it, if We try to make it good."

The wee girl grew to womanhood, Her gold was streaked with gray; She strove for wealth, position-all The things that do not pay. She learned the bitter lesson that The old man khew she should--"Life's what we make it," only when We try to make it good. —Los Angeles Herald.

The dog was "lost, strayed or stolen"—the two versions differ on this important point. At any rate it changed its abode and the place where it had been bred and brought up knew it no more. And its baby playmate wept herself to sleep at night without her chum. That's how I knew the story. I learned it from the playmate's childish lips. Time passed and the childish heartsore was healed of its sorrow, when cews came that the poor, old spaniel had broken its leg and had worthless cripple. This opened the old sore again and my baby friend implored me to find her old chum and bring it to her. In conclusion, he asked all the friends of the government to rally to the sup-port of Mr. King, from whose frank, manly and able speech, they could judge that he would make an excellent repre-sentative. He trusted that Mr. King would receive the same splendid support which was given to the speeker when he appeal-d to them in September of 1900, and when he received a majority of nearly 900 votes. (Loud applause.)

J. D. Hazen, M. P. P.

Mr. Hazen followed and was well received. As the hour was late unfortunately a good many electors were deprived of the opportunity of hearing him, as they were obliged to catch the trains for home. For this reason also the attorney general did not reply to Mr. Hazen. Alsogether not only the majority of the large crowd present, but the honors of the day avere with the government.
