that "some objections" have been made to the tax on shipbuilding materials. He says that, in response to Mr. Burpee's question, "the Premier replied he had no reason to believe Mr. Carvell had made such arrangements." The reported to have instructed its Cincinnating reported to have instructed its Cincinnating reporter of the News and the Speaker of the House didn't catch that remark, or, in catching it, failed to see how important it was as a proof of the guilelessness ant it was as a proof of the guilelessness of the good and great Chief of the Cabinet. Is he too modest to speak of himself, or what is the trouble? Why didn't he advertise for the required cars last fall when he was advised that they would be required? A little information from this official would take well as a change from the sweet simplicity role he is playing. We can't believe that the head of so important a Departrole he is playing. will be made in the tariff respecting these articles.—Telegraph's Ottawa despatch.

"Some objections having been taken" sounds rich. Its naivete is refreshing. The poor innocent seems to be rather surprised, on the whole, that any objections were made, and evidently supposes that his statement will be unexpected news to the people of St. John. He will be astonished to know that the people took it for granted that objections would be made by those of their representatives who were not sent to Ottaway pledged, like Mr. DeVeber, to give "a liberal support to the Government." He will be more astonished to learn that every man and woman in St. John, with the exception of the conductors of three newspapers, has expressed. John, with the exception of the conductors of three newspapers, has expressed the most unqualified objections to the tax on shipbuilding. We hope the efforts to secure a modification of the outrageous tariff agreed to by the Minister of Customs will succeed. Then how people will smile as the poor souls who dared not denounce the imposition on shipbuilding congratulate them on its removal in consequence of "some objections" made by men not pledged to the Government or in its pay!

We are not surprised at the sensitiveness of the Ministers on the tariff topic.

murder. Walter L. Cole, a prominent merchant of Blackshear, was found dead near his store, his throat cut and his back full of buckshot. Every gun in the village was seized, including that of Carpenter, who was uncle of the murdered man. The stock of Carpenter's gun was broken and the barrel covered with blood. A pair of pants were found, spattered with blood, and a pair of shoes bloody about the heels. Carpenter killed Cole for his money.
