Symptoms of Worms.

The usual symptoms of worms are intestinal irritation, pains in the belly, irritation or itching at the lower end of the bowel, alternation of diarrhoea and costiveness, great thirst, and variable and often voracious appetite. The child sometimes becomes hungry almost immediately after eating heartily, and at other times the appetite is feeble and depraved, soliciting strange articles, such as dirt, chalk, &c. There is a foetid breath, the complexion is pale, or sallow, or leaden, with occasional flushes, swelling of the upper lip, watery mouth, enlargement of the nostrils, a livid circle around the eyes, dilatation or contraction of the pupil, with a fixed, unmeaning expression, and enlargement of the belly. The child's sleep is disturbed; he often starts and awakens with terror, grinds his teeth, picks his nose, and has a dry cough and headache, slow fever, and spasmodic or convulsive affections. To these may be added a slow, irregular, remittent fever, which, whilst it continues, is attended with great drowsiness, and at other times a morbid restlessness characterizes the condition of the patient. There is pain of the bowels, and at the pit of the stomach, with occasional purging, and a good deal of gastric distress. The head is much affected, sometimes painfully, though for the most part with stupor or delirium. The eye is wild, the pupil dilated, the ale of the nose contracted, the cheek flushed, and the forehead polished, as if glazed. The case, in short, presents so many of the appearances of hydrocephalus (water in the head), that it is easily mistaken for that disease. There is often a very strange alteration of the voice, and in some instances a total loss of speech. Worms may also be suspected in children where there is emaciation, and especially weakness of the bowels, accompanied by discharges of slime or mucus.

Use Freeman's Worm Powders in preference to all others. They contain no calomel or other injurious drugs, and are recommended by every person who has used them. See page 17.

Victoria Carbolie Salve goes directly to the diseased part.
