Miscellaneous.

Ground-Hogs.

How can ground hogs be killed? I do not wish to trap them. E. B. Ans.—Saturate a cloth with carbon isulphide and place it in the burrow This forms a poisonous gas which is heavier than air, thus settling to the bottom of the burrow and killing all life therein. This substance is very flammable and therefore care should be exercised in handling it.

I have a four-year-old mare that is a cribber. Is there any way of curing her of this habit?

Ans.—Cribbing is a habit which is difficult to break. It is customary to have a strap buckled rather tightly around the neck at all times. Driving spikes along the edge of the manager so that the mare cannot grab a hold of the wood, may stop her of the habit when in the Miscellaneous.

1. Moles are tunnelling lawn and flower beds. How can I best get rid of them?

2. What is the cause of ants persistently covering peony buds? Have used hellebore also black leaf 40, without the least effect. How can they be destroyed?

3. Leaves of pansy plants turn yellow and after a while die. Have found grubs in the soil. If grubs are the cause how can they be killed? P.

Ans.—The common way of combating moles wherever they are sufficiently abundant to require combating-a state of affairs which is rare in Ontario-is to trap them by specially made traps.

R. R. NO. 4, PORT PERRY, ONT.

If you would write to E. W. Nelson. Bureau of Biological Survey, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and ask him for a ccpy of Farmers' Bulletin 832, you would find there a description of the methods of trapping and all the types of traps used. bait is used in connection with these traps. They are not the same as the ordinary traps for catching mice though they are of a scmewhat similar nature.

The cause of ants persistently covering beony buds is that they are attracted by the gummy substance that occurs on the protecting envelope of the bud before the buds open. The ants are doing no damage to the plants and are merely feeding upon this attractive substance.

Ordinary house ants are usually best controlled in my experience by the use of tartar emetic, a white powder which should be mixed in the preportion of about ½ teaspoonful in. ¼ cup of honey. Molasses or any syrup would also do, but the honey is preferable in that it does not dry out quickly. The poisoned iquid is placed in very small quantities, just a drop or two, here and there wherever the ants are found running. Usually in two or three days they will have disappeared. The liquid may be put upon little pieces of cardboard or upon small pieces of shingle or on a hip, and thus not come in contact at all with the wood work or the floor if there is any objection to such contact.

As to the leaves of pansy turning yellow and then dying, no satisfactory answer can be given without seeing specimens, also specimens of the grubs that are reported as being in the soil around these pansies.
