Profits Remain in the Business

[illegible]

The Crossfield Co-operative Bulletin Board. The items handled and the prices that prevailed in July are here shown.

The financing of the company is assisted by the money which farmers weave in. They have every confidence in the company's stability, and many when shipping livestock leave their money in until they want it in goods. With men buying supplies, business is done on a cash or monthly payment plan. The livestock shipments, however, take care of a large percentage of the farmers' accounts.

The Crossfield U.F.A. Co-operative Association is a good example of a co-operative enterprise, proceeding judiciously and without undue haste along constructive lines. The directorate, which includes A. A. Hall of the provincial executive of the U.F.A., has laid it down as a policy to always profit by experience. The association has a great asset in the U.F.A. locals, which are well organized in the district. Since its very existence has depended upon the educational work carried on under the organization of the provincial organization it is strongly in favor of working in closest co-operation with U.F.A. activities.
