A despatch to New York says: From official British sources The New York Times received on Tuesday the translation of a letter found on German prisoner captured in the battle of the Somme. The prisoner, writing to his family in Stuttgart, said that the Germans had received ders "to take no prisoners, but to despatch them with the bayonet. With the translation came a photograph of the original letter, which was addressed to "Karl Koch and family, Kaltenal, near Stuttgart." A part of the letter, as officially translated, follows: "And now we had three days' rest, and I could get nothing at all to drink except costly wine. It is very agreeable to us that we are oblight to go through it once again; you not conceive it. So many of our contrades are missing, who have fallen were wounded during the week, a now we are obliged to go through once more. Oh dear! Here we have broce more. Oh dear! Here we have proper Englishmen against us, and have orders to take no prisoners, but to despatch them all with the bayon-et, which I would not be sorry to do. But they are always getting more prisoners from us, and what do they do with them?"
