A Great Temperance Advocate. Sir George White, of Norwich, Eng., the leader of the Nonconformists in the House of Commons, began life as a boy as 5 shillings a week in the very business of which he is now principal partner and managing director, a firm of boot and leather merchants in the county town of Norfolk. He is a great temperance man, and did probably more than anyone else to break down the drinking habits and customs which were the bane of the commercial traveler a generation ago. When he went on the road as a young man he made up his mind that he would neither buy any intoxicants for himself nor for anyone else, and this determination he has always steadily adhered to.

"A Real Lord." The appointment of the Earl of Sel-bourne to be a Knight of the Garter recalls an amusing story of the days when, in addition to political work, he labored in the East end of London among the poor. One of his duties at a certain working-men's club was to receive subscriptions. His name was then not known to most of the men. However, one of them one night was struck by something in Lord Wolmer's appearance—that was Lord Sel-borne's title then—and he asked the manager of the club for information.
"I say, who's that tall chep wot takes the subscriptions?" "That is Lord Wolmer." The man was amazed. "Is 'e a lord," he exclaimed, thunder-struck—"a real lord? But 'e never said nothink about it!"

ALEXANDER'S SNAKE

A Story of Magic and Credulity In the Olden Days.

No snake that ever lived won greater fame for the time than Alexander's. Lucian tells the story. Apollonius, a master of the magic arts, had many disciples, among whom was a practicing physician who lived in Abonotichus, a small town on the shore of the Black sea. There Alexander was born of humble parentage and imbibed from the old doctor all that he had learned from Apollonius of medicine and magic. He was a lad of striking appearance, tall, handsome, with a fine head of hair, lustrous brown eyes and a voice sweet and limpid. "God grant," wrote Lucian, who knew him, "that I may never meet with such another. His coming was wonderful, his dexterity matchless. His eagerness for knowledge, his capacity for learning and power of memory were equally extraordinary." Such was the well favored young peasant who sallied forth from his native town in search of fame and fortune. Soon he fell in with one Coconnas, a shrewd tipster for the races and somewhat of a juggler. The two rogues joined forces and meandered about telling fortunes. Arriving at Pella, they found a great number of huge, harmless snakes which lived in the houses, played and slept with the children and destroyed poisonous rats. Alexander promptly purchased one of the largest, a veritable monster, so tame that it would coil about his body and remain in any desired position. Then he made a human face for it out of linen, painted it ingeniously and shaped it so that the mouth would open and shut by an arrangement of horsehair, letting the forked tongue shoot in and out at the will of the master. Having no further use for Coconnas, he either administered polson to him or let him die from some infection and returned with his snake to his native town. There he declared himself a prophet and announced that the god Aesculapius was about to appear. The people were credulous, excitable and eager for a new divinity.

When the great day arrived Alexander pretended to discover in a puddle of water a goose egg which he had placed there after removing the contents, substituting a small embryo snake just born and carefully sealing the shell with wax. When the multitude had gathered he broke the shell and produced the tiny creature, which in a few moments grew to be the monster from Pella by the simple process of substitution. Thereafter the big snake, believed to be Aesculapius, led a busy life. He gave seances, told fortunes in writing and even spoke freely, with the aid of the prophet's ventriloquial powers. Alexander grew rich and powerful, kept a small army of retainers and spies, wielded no little influence over the government even at Rome and died at a ripe old age in the fullness of his renown. What became of the snake nobody knows. Probably at the last the prophet dispatched the faithful creature to prevent the discovery of his deception after his death.-George Harvey in North American Review.

The Courtship Gate. We have been shown a design for an upholstered front gate which seems estined to become very popular. The footboard is cushioned, and there is a warm soapstone on each side, the inside step being adjustable, so that a short girl can bring her lips to the line of any given mustache without trouble. If the gate is occupied at 10:30 p. m., an iron hand extends from one gate post, takes the young man by the left ear, turns him around, and he is at once started toward home by a steel foot. The girl can, if she likes, set this part at a later hour than 10:30. -Jones County (Ga.) News.

Cibraltar's Searchlight Battery For ships to pass around Gibraltar, England's and the world's greatest fortress, without being observed even at night is a practical impossibility, owing to the great battery of searchlights arranged along the bottom of the rock. A ship running either in or out runs into one of the fixed beams of light and is revealed. A moving beam of light then follows her until the lookout officers are satisfied as to her intentions.—Popular Mechanics.
