The Evening Chit-Chat

My cat has two kittens—a little lady tiger kitty, and a sturdy little black boy kitten. And now lest I leave a loophole for my friends, the anti-suffragists, I want to say what I think the kitten does not symbolize. She does not stand for the woman who wants the vote, and yet still wants to be treated chivalrously by men, to have her physical weakness considered and respected. It is one of the oldest and most common anti-suffrage arguments that if a woman gets the vote, she must not expect to have the men give up their seats in the street car, or in other ways show her courtesy any longer. To me this argument seems like the most absolute balderdash. Woman does not assume in asking for the vote that she is man's physical equal. She simply assumes that, insofar as the qualifications necessary to make her a voter are concerned, she is, or can soon be educated to be, man's equal. This matter has nothing whatever to do with her physical qualifications or her need of chivalry. A man would rise to give an old, sick or lame man a seat in a street car. And yet all these men are voters. The fact that they have the right to vote, does not deprive them of the privilege of being treated with kindness and consideration on account of their physical weakness. In claiming her ability to do the same work as man, woman places herself on the same level of competition so far as that work goes and I think should ask no quarter in the struggle, but I do not see why either the fact that she competes with man in her daily work, or the fact that she wants to help govern herself should deprive her of man's courtesy and consideration in other relations of life. I am ashamed of my own sex when it raises its weakness as a white feather and demands special privileges in a struggle which it has entered, with the declaration that it was willing to fight on equal terms. I am ashamed of the other sex when it makes woman's demand for justice, and her desire to do a man's work, if that is what she is fitted for, a pretext to deny her chivalry, courtesy, consideration, and protection when her physical inferiority demands these.

Surely you know what I mean. The lack of logic, justice, and sense of fair play shown by the woman who asks to be put on an equal footing with men, and then resents it when he treats her as an equal. I think the tiger kitty symbolizes the woman who claims her right to go into an office to do work, which used to be done exclusively by men, and then wants in addition to the rights of a man the special privileges of a woman. I think my kitten symbolizes the woman who enters some professional, or artistic field as a competitor with men, and then is satisfied, or even anxious to have her work judged with leniency, because she is a woman. Agents Repplier has a very stinging essay on this subject, in which she justly rebukes the woman who does not expect that her work should be fairly and squarely compared with men's work and adjudged good or bad on this basis, but is satisfied to have it called good "considering."

Woman's Power Over Man. Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R.V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for women's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit. IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and strengthen Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

Uncle Walt THE POET PHILOSOPHER. When Sherlock goes to solve a riddle Doc Watson toddles at his heels content to play the second fiddle to his admiring squire. He follows Sherlock through the jungles of London crime, a DR. WATSON mutt, a fluke, and everything he does he bungles and gains from Holmes a stern rebuke. He tries to imitate his master, to analyze the evidence, and all his efforts meet disaster, and he shows up like twenty cents. And so we grin at this physician, whose stupid style is Sherlock's foil, and think he'd help his own condition if he for his own hand would toll. Are you a Watson, chasing after some bigger men, to ape his curves, to win the world's contempt and laughter? For that's what such a skate deserves. Are you a cheap john imitator, content to follow in the track of some one infinitely greater, to try and duplicate his knack? I'd rather frame this little ditty (for which I get a brace of wheels) than march into a conquered city—and march at some one else's heels.

Dreadnoughts in Wax. Marvels of the Modern Testing-Tank. The tests carried out in the experimental tank at the National Physical Laboratory at Teddington, apropos of the collision between the White Star liner Olympic and the cruiser Hawke, calls attention to those model basins, and the important part they play in modern shipbuilding. Indeed, the rapid development in the speed of our liners and warships is undoubtedly due to the work of these experimental basins. By building a model of the proposed vessel in wax and towing it through the water it is possible to learn the requisite horsepower necessary to drive such a craft at a given speed, how she would behave, what waves she would make, and many other valuable points of special interest to the shipbuilder. All the leading navies now possess these tanks, where models of projected warships are first tested before the contract is given out for their erection. Saving Thousands of Pounds. In this way many thousands of pounds are saved every year, for ideas which look very well on paper are found to be impracticable when subjected to actual experiment. Our own Admiralty was the first to recognize the value of these tanks, and for many years the British Admiralty was the only Power that could boast of possessing one. The basin belonging to the Admiralty is at Haslar, near Portsmouth, and experiments are conducted there under the superintendence of Mr. R. Edmund Froude, the son of Mr. William Froude, who may be described as the "father of testing tanks." So far back as 1870 Mr. William Froude built, at his own expense, a private tank at Torquay, and was the first individual to prove the value and utility of experiments made with model ships dragged through the water. His tank, which was about 200 feet in length, resembled a sort of covered swimming bath. The Government tank at Haslar is 100 feet long and 20 feet in breadth. High above the water there is a miniature tramway which runs up and down the basin. It is virtually a moving laboratory, for it is fitted up with many delicate appliances for testing the model which is clamped to it in the water below. Although the model is attached to the travelling platform, it is free to rise and fall of its own will, and by the special instruments upon the carriage the behaviour of the model in the water below is faithfully recorded. Models of Liners. For instance, a wax model of the hull of a ship 10 feet long is tested. It is possible to ascertain how a ship 200, 250, 300, or more feet in length would behave if designed upon this model, the power necessary to obtain certain speeds, etc. The models are made of paraffin wax and when finished with are invariably melted down. In the case of a new type of warship, several models are made and tested. Indeed, often fifteen to twenty models will be used, the experiments extending over several months. It is reported that before the keel of our first Dreadnought was laid down £500 was used in the wax used in the many models that were tested. In the same way, the great shipbuilders possess testing-tanks where models of liners and yachts are built first in wax and subjected to exhaustive experiments. At Messrs. Denny Brothers' tank at the Leven Shipyard no fewer than 60 models of Shamrock II. were made and tested, the experiments extending over nine months.

Policeman Befriended Woman. Fifteen Years Ago, and She Left Him $20,000. New York, Dec. 16.—Fifteen years ago Denis Lyons, then a young police patrolman, went down into his pocket to help an elderly woman, who had lost her money, to buy a ticket for herself and daughter to Elmira. Last night Lieut. Denis Lyons was visited at his desk in the Charles St. station by an attorney, who announced that the woman he had befriended had died and left him a fortune of $20,000 in recognition of the kindness which the officer had almost forgotten.
