Buelph Evening Mercury MONDAY EV'NG, OCT. 26, 1868 POETRY. The Old Church on the Hill. On the height of a lonely hill
Its rusty old form uprears, nding in solitude, where it has stood
Through the storms of a hundred years O may the thoughts of the heart, As we stand by the temple of God, I think of the worshippers, vanished and gone Who up to its courts have trod; n peace to the church on the hill!
sre its rusty old form it uprears;
tand, in its loneliness, where it has sto ough the storms of a hundred years. The Braes of Yarrow Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century. *And now farewell,' said Lindsay, and despite his effort to preserve a firm accent his voice faltered, 'tarry not in the country but go straight to the harbour of Leith and take passage in the first vessel that sails—no matter whither.'

'There I must oppose your authority, sir,' broke in elibert warmly, 'before I can quit my country I must meet Binram—' Madman, think you that he will enter the lists with one that has been disgraced like you—with one whose very title to bear a sword has been taken from him by command of the Regent?'

'I will force him to it.'

'What, and bring down upon you the whole wrath of Angus. Away with you, and leave Binram to me.'

'That will I never do. By his falsehood I am degraded, a good lady's fame is stained, and I should count myself unworthy to raise my head amongst honourable men were I to fiy before my sword had proven my truth upon his body.'

'Too base for such a sword as this to be defiled with. Nay, listen to me,' pursued the Captain, with difficulty controlling his patience; 'it is not this bastard Barras alone you oppose in this matter, it is the law of Scotland—the authority of Majesty itself. You have no longer the right to wear a sword in this land—were you to force Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you, and were you to free Binram to meet you and were you to free Binram to meet you and were you to free Binram to meet you and were you to free Binram to meet you and you would be pick "Obstinate".

"Obstinate" one villain the less behind me."

"In this ment obstinate. Ab, my true friend, for our Holy Mother's aske do not be angry with me, but rather pity me. I have tried to put a brave face on this matter, but my beart is sore. You can—you must feel how my foot would falter, how my arm would fall me were lon atrange soil fighting a stranger's cause, knowing the while that I left a name in my own dear land upon which the shame of false friend and treacherous soldier has been branded. I had rather die a felon's death down yonder in the Grassmarmarket with every hind to point in scorn and jeer at me than suffer that."

"Dann'! growled the Captain, affected by the earnestness of his friend's argument, and as usual trying hard to hide his tenderuses; 'I have a mind to leave you to your fatebut no, curse me, I'll not do that. Where can you hear from me?

"Enough, you know where to communicate with me. Now away, a God's name, for your hour is up, and saning guard you.

A soft tap at the door stayed Glibert's adies on his lips, and startled both himself and his companion.

"Now here is some soft tongued silken-jerkined page come to make inquiry of you."

Begone said Lindsay, grmly, 'and by the rood, for once they will find me wanting in a discipline.'

He opened the door, and sure enough there stood a handsome soft featured yout him estod and a stone of the town of the town of the town of the proof of the town of the town of the proof of the proof of the proof of the town of the proof of the rood, for once they will find me wanting in discipline.

He opened the door, and sure enough there stood a handsome soft featured youth in page's garb, who asked if Master Elliot chanced to be still with the Captain.

'Ay, he is here.'

The page stepped into the apartment without invitation, closed the door, and with his finger on his lips, as if signalling the gentlemen to be silent. searched the breast of his doublet. He produced a dainty billet, which, with a profound salutation, he delivered to Gilbert.
