Lodge members should endeavor to make visitors feel "at home." Whenever a stranger enters the lodge room he should becordially welcomed and greeted with that spirit of hospitality with which you would meet a friend calling uron you at your residence. Too often are visitors allowed to sit through a meeting without being approached by anyone, and allowed to depart without a word of welcome.

proached by anyone, and anlowed to depart without a word of welcome.

Self-constituted committees should exist in all lodges, the members of which should offer the hand of greeting to visitors as they enter, saying a pleasant word now and then during the course of the meeting and cause them to feel that they are indeed in the midst of a fraternal family.

This should be done with as little formality as possible, for in that manner only has it the stamp of sincerity. Visitors made to feel that a spirit of congeniality exists and is practically exemplified in any all lodge soon form a special attachment to it and make it a practice tobe at its meetings frequently, and urge their friends in the order to accompany them. Brethren, make a trial of greeting visitors as suggested, and you will soon appreciate the good results that are inevitable.
