He enters the parlor car and takes a seat opposite Misa Raymond. Beside here sits the loyear-old girl. He'd forgotten e'l about her.

"Hum—pleasant day."

"Yos, delightful."

"Do you think it will snow to-morrow "onversation proceeds pleasantly and easily until interrupted by the entrance of the train conductor and the parlor car conductor. Misa Raymond gives up her ticket and pays $2 for her seat to Buffalo, her destination.

Train conductor (tapping little girl on the other shoulder)—Two dollars to Buffalo?

Little girl—I don't pay any fare.

T. C.—Under 12 and over 5, half fare.
P. C. C.—You take up a whole seat just like a grown person.

"She's under my charge, but her mother said she wouldn't have to pay fare. Where's your purse, Lizzie?"

L. G.—I haven't any.

Miss Raymond (examining her purse and much distressed at the result)—I haven't money enough. What shall I do:
T. C.—La ja fare, anyway.
P. C. C.—The little girl can go forward in one of the regular coaches.

Miss Raymond finds enough in her purse of bash shif fare to Enfalse and hands it to be train conductor.

This heart is not by any means broken at the prospect of losing the company of the little girl, but when he thinks he sees just stanyon of a glisten under Miss Raymond. Here, conductor.

Of course her distress gives Jack an opportunity to say a great many things of a sort suited to the circumstances, and he seek like hugging—the little girl.

It is really a very interesting conversation that is interrupted by the appearance of a brakeman and a sound that resembles "Nellawillentymintsfreshment."

Jack, thinking he will get his $2 at Euflalo, asks if he may got some "freshments."
