But Gilbert, like all boys, saw in the encients his ideal of manhood, moral as well as physical, and respected them accordingly. How many and many a time under the old eak tree would he argue with me on their chivalry, their patriotwith me on their chivalry, their patriotism, and their love of all that was noble and good! How his eye kindled when he quoted Curtius driving his war steed headlong into the gulf, or Leonidas willing to swith Pluto, so that he turned back a Persian myriads from the human bulwark framed by his own and the bodies of the devated handful that held the pass of Thermopylae; or the high-crested Horatius and his trusty twain to right and left, the pride of Rome, herself a colony of warriors—

"The three who kept the bridge so well In the brave days of old'

any of the thousand instances of patriotic devotion and heroic daring with which the annals of those large-hearted heathens teem. Many a time we laid the book upon the grass, and, regardless of cricket, fishing, boating, the warning-bell for juncheon, or the carriage-load of visitors luncheon, or the carriage-load of visitors grinding up the avenue, we commented hour after hour on the subject of our studies, and discussed, each in his own way the comparative advantages of ancient and modern times. My boy, of course, was all for shield and helmet egainst hat and umbrella; preferred his deal Rome, with its Applan Way and its Forum, to the material London, of which he knew too well the Piccadilly and the be knew too well the Piccadilly and the tab-stands; opined that we had hardly yet recovered the effects of the dark ages; esteemed the Olympic Games far superfor to the Derby, and regretted equally the laureled triumphs glistening and winding upward to the Capital with ing upward to the Capitol. the free discussions when sage met sage in the open Athenian schools; with the glorious obstinacy of youth, adopted the glorious obstinacy of youth, adopted the trational side of the argument, and stood Irrational side of the argument, and stood by it to the death.

But it was on the oft-vexed question of woman's mission and woman's influ-ence that my young pupil came out in his brightest colors. I have heard mili-tary men affirm that perfectly raw re-cruits, who had never seen a shot fired, are preferable to the staunchest veterans for one desperate coup de main, or rash are preferable to the staunchest veterans for one desperate coup de main, or rash haphazard attack; and in the same way I have often remarked that the boy of eighteen professes an utter contempt for his natural enemy, where the man of thirty guards every assailable point, and intrenches himself in the strongest position he can command. Then years later he will decamp vithout beat of drum, and seek safety in flight. On one occasion I hazarded the opinion that the woman-worship which came in with the institution of chivalry, and will not outlast that superstition a day, had done more than any human influence to advance our civilization and ameliorate the condition of mankind. Gilbert was up in arms at once, he disputed by position at its very outset, he denied that woman ever had any influence at all, except among the weaker minds and less commanding spirits of the opposite sex. He flushed and chafed with the subject as among the weaker minds and less commanding spirits of the opposite sex. He flushed and chafed with the subject as he threw his straw hat aside and walked up and down in the sun like a young Apollo. I ought to have been gratified with his progress. He brought all the learning he possessed to bear upon the subject, and fired off a sixty-eight pounder, so to speak, at the commencement of the action.

"Why, even old Herodotus saeers at them as mere chattels," quoth the untried legionary; "and, like a dry old fellow as he is, he gives us his real opinion when he quotes the sensible maxim of the Persians, "that to carry off women by violence is the act of wicked men, but to trouble one's self about avenging them when so carried off is the act of foolish ones, and to pay no regard to foolish ones, and to pay no regard to them when carried off, the act of wise men; that that it is clear that if they had not been willing, they could not have been carried off. We were reading it only last week, and you laughed your hand on the i only last week, and you laughed yourself, though you don't often laugh, when I construed the passage. It is clear that he didn't think them much worth troubling one's self about. Nor have I forsotten the inscriptions of Sesostris, nor the regulations of the Egyptians, which permitted no woman to enter the pre-cincts of a temple, as an inferior being, unworthy of the service of a god or god-dess; and even the Greeks, though they dess; and even the Greeks, though they were fools enough to make war about Elelen, treated their captive women as slaves, and only respected their mothers and sisters as a part of themselves, not because they belonged to the inferior sex; while the Romans, who, I have heard you say, improved as much upon the Greeks in common sense as they fell short of them in imagination and poetry, evidently considered them mere machines to rear their children, and if they did speak of them as gracing the wine-cup. speak of them as gracing the wine-cup, or enhancing the charms of a feast, apparently deemed it a matter of no moment which should be the preferred one, but lumped in Chloris and Chloe, Lydia and Lalage, all at the same premium, one as good as another."

"Yet did the conquerors of these very Romans, the tall Gothic barbarians, frame all their measures by the advice of their wives, nay, even bade the experience of the warrior give place in perience of the warrior give place in council to the sagas of the wise women, daughters of Odin."

I hazarded this argument with some diffidence, knowing the storm it would bring down.

"The bull-headed, superstitious, beefdevouring gladiators!" was the reply. with just enough sense to knock their heads against a wall, which luckily for them had been sapied and crumbling for centuries. Could they keep Rome when they had it? Could they defend Constantinople when it was in their clumsy iron grasp? Did not the Turks was them had on the Rosphagus? Did press them hard on the Bosphorus? Did no the Moors enslave them in Spain? The polygamist against the monogamist all the world over, till the latter abandoned his creed and began to put his faith in policy and common sense, in-stead of a cross-handled sword and a long-eved ladve light-o'-love!

"Then you scorn the institution of chivalry, Gilbert," was my reply, "and prefer the picture of Archimedes demontrating his problem during the assault, to that of Dunois bleeding to death, with his back again a tree and his face to the enemy, the while he made a Christian ending before the crucific of his sword-Dunois was a fine fellow," answered Gilbert, "Besides, there was no woman in his case. What I protest against is the raising up of an idol and bowing down before it because it has soft eyes and long hair. You always take the other side of the question to draw me out; I know I'm right because I feel I am. How hot it is! There's my mother going out in the carriage. Don't let us read any more for today. Come and take up the trimmers we set last night and up the trimmers we set last night after that we'll go and catch a pike in the witch-pool under the elms."

I rose and followed him in silence, thinking of Anthony and the tawny-pkinned fishes, and the hook that sooner or later is in every man's nose.

CHAPTER III. I was not always a recluse-not al-ways the musty book-worm who exists only among dusty shelves and rare old only among dusty shelves and rare old body-printed editions. The same man who some years ago, would have bade me see his two-year-olds gallop now asks me to arrange his library. I once lived in the world as others do. Shall I confess it? my heart was never thoroughly interested in what is termed society. Perhaps I had not room for so many objects of interest and affection; perhaps, like an unskillful gambler. I set all my store on one desperate throw and lost, and cared not to try again; to play for and cared not to try again; to play mention it because I want an explana-tion of something which my former ex-perience has convinced me to be an un-doubted fact; and I do not wish my ex-perience to be set at naught, as that of the has never been down in the and spilt his blood upon the

The heavy penalty imposed on Wonderly, the jockey, as The Spirit went to press last week, raised a great amount of local gossip, but the concensus of opinion was decidedly in favor of the officials.

As repeatedly stated in these columns, nine-tenths of the troubles at the starts and during races have been due to the mistakn importance attached to the average prominent or semi-prominent jockey. No matter how wellbehaved or retiring a boy might be, he had only to win a few races and the illustrated press clamored for his portrait, his biography, eventually handicap, about 6 furlongs—Monte slopping over to the effect that never Carlo, 100 (L. The Coney Island Jockey Club's spring meeting will open at Sheepshead Bay tomorrow, the initial attraction being the Suburban Handicap of a mile and a quarter, purse $10,000. Advance Guard, the most unlucky horse in America, will have at Sheepshead Bay a better opportunity to display his great prowess as a racehorse than at any other course in the country, says the New York World. Tomorrow will mark the opening of the Blue Ribbon meeting of the Detroit Driving Club, and levers of the light harness horse may depend upon keen racing and good, clean sport. The meeting will end on the evening of June 13. There are any number of good ones at Grosse Pointe track, in

The great American Derby is to be run at Washington Park, Chicago, one week from tomorrow, June 21. anticipated that there will be about a dozen starters, the average about ten, so that this year the field promises to be a trifle larger. Abe Frank, Heno, Old England, Dixieline, Cruzados, Arsenal, Belle's Commoner, McChesney, Cunard, Hyphen, Inventor, Lord Quex, Jaubert, Oom Paul, Owenton, Sombrero, Corrigan, Wyeth and The Giver are among the probabilities. It is almost a certainty that Abe Frank will go to the post on June 21. This son of Hanover has been the one great disappointment of the season up to date, and yet the future books stand to pay out over $100,000 on him should he be returned winner. For this reason alone, Abe Frank is still at a short price for the race. Two of the eastern probabilities have loomed into great prominence, and as both are practically start in the Derby their performances are of more than usual interest. These can be no doubt as to Heno's class. Many of the good eastern judges have selected him as the best of this year's crop of 3-year-olds. His greatest feat was in gaining on Advance Guard in a stretch run, and any horse that can do that must be counted as a good one, particularly after Advance and Robinson.

Guard's showing in the recent big At Cleveland handicap. Clarence Mackay, Heno's owner, is out for the Derby. Last year he paid $10,000 for His Eminence in order to have a horse in the race. This year he is out, not only for the honor, but for revenge.

A Derby eligible who is now pushing Heno for the three-year-old honors in the east is Old England, of the stable of Green B. Morris. Old England has been running good races in every start, but the performance that won his new admirers was in the Preakness Stakes at Gravesend recently. The colt carried 118 pounds and ran a mile and 70 yards in 1:45% on a sloppy track. Old England is only one of the cards in Morris' hands. He has Homestead, who has not started in the east, but who is declared by many trainers to be a better colt than Old England. He was worked at Gravesend, and information has been received that he will surely be a starter in the Derby. C. T. Patterson is of the opinion that Old England is a very pose of him at a mile and a quarter or a mile and a half. Morris, with these two horses will be the original favorite, has gone wrong, man to beat at Washington Park.' it is said, and will probably not start.

They attend to their own business, avoid undue roughness, and play the game from start to finish. Every man on the team is a gentleman and conducts himself properly. Gentlemanly play will triumph in the end. Brantford and Woodstock may have the pleasure of "making each other's acquaintance" in the finals after all.

The opening championship game of the N. A. L. A. will be played at Toronto tomorrow between the Torontos and the Nationals of Montreal. The Torontos will line up, with few exceptions as on their recent English trip, which resulted so successfully The Frenchmen have so far lost two games in the league race. They showed considerable improvement last Saturday against the Capitals, and it took the Ottawa team 41 minutes to score the first goal.

Tomorrow the Tecumsehs play their first league match with the champion day for a match with the lady golfers Dufferins at Orangeville, and unless trimming. If the Indians repeat the tactics adopted by them in the game with the Shamrocks they will deserve the scorn of every lover of the national game in Canada.
