has turned out to be even greater than the very large estimates which were made some time ago. The remarkable growth is attributed very largely to the excellent weather. The entire yield is given at 5,761,357 bales, which is more than double that of any year prior to 1851. Last year's crop, the only one which so far had reached five millions of bales was less than that of this year by nearly three quarters of a million
