Immigration and refugees

Responsibility for implementing Canada's immigration program abroad rests with the Department of External Affairs. During 1983, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission's (CEIC) restriction on the immigration of persons destined to the labour force continued to affect the size and character of the immigrant flow which then became a combination of family-class immigrants and those selected for humanitarian reasons. The number of immigrant visas issued overseas during the past fiscal year was 76 153, a decrease of 21 per cent from those issued the previous year. At the same time, the number of visitor visas issued at all Canadian missions increased by 5 per cent to approximately 300 000.

During 1983, the Department met several emergency situations caused by internal events in certain countries or by changes in Canadian immigration policy. The imposition of a visitor visa requirement on citizens of Sri Lanka and Bangladesh, with a concurrent special humanitarian program for Sri Lankans allowing them to join relatives in Canada, necessitated the assignment of temporary duty officers to the missions in Colombo and Dhaka. A permanent immigration presence is to be established at Canadian posts in both coun-
