

referred is, I think, highly regarded generally in the house. He is an outstanding member of the bar, and was first elected to the House of Commons in 1958. Since being in the house he has contributed both in debate here and also in committee in such a way as I feel will commend his name to the support of hon. gentlemen in all parts of the house. He is one who, in the discharge of this responsibility, will act with fairness and without bias, and will maintain in the house that decorum which is necessary to be maintained at all times.
