great and startling changes. The fourth suggestion is preferential tariffs; this would include duties on manufactures and on foods, but not on other raw material.

The context would indicate that the writer does not regard preference and protection as the same thing. We are bound to say that we do not see how a preferential trade scheme can exist without protection; for the preference of a colony invoives the maintenance of a colony invoives the maintenance of a tariff against foreign countries.

Such a tariff could not be called a revenue tariff, because its object would

The interest in this case is the right of the city to control its streets, and also to terminate the franchise of the Toronto Street Railway Company eighteen years hence. The people of Toronto have had good reason to believe that these rights are being attacked, and it is not at all surprising that very vigorous language is used baulk and buck, and kick, at first, but sooner or later they trot up to the line as spry as you please. The Minister of Railways has included a clause in his new general railway bill, making it compulsory upon railway companies to provide members of the senate, commons and legislatures with passes. This will free the members from the baneful influences of being under a compliment to the companies. More than disclaimers, however, are required. We want not only to be assured that the want not only to be assured that the Toronto Street Railway Company, the radials and the Toronto and Hamilton are virtually one. We want also to be assured that no powers will be granted to anybody that can be transferred to the Toronto Street Railway Company, and used to the prejudice of the City of Toronto in its dealings with that company. This is the crucial

TWO CENTS A MILE. One of the opponents of the two-cent railway rate advocated by Mr. Maclean said that the railway companies now granted low rates on holidays and other special occasions. They not only do this, but they grant two-cent rates and other low rates to special classes of persons, including the Canadian Press Association. They also give a two and a half cent rate for a return ticket.

Who Tells of the Troubles of a it's the best. Circus in Paisley

Paisley, July 10 .- The special train, with its several hundred passengers on pleasure bent, had not left the city many miles be hind before those who had the same objective point in view began to gravitate to some particular section of the long train, where they could renew old acquaintances and go over the old stories of their school boy days at Chesley, Walkerton, Paisley or rural sections, which, for the time being at least, was to them the one bright spot on

As the larger number were bound for Southampton and intermediate points, that section of the train had the greater number of such family groups, but where the other section felt short in numbers it made up in enthusiasm, and the peaks of laughter that repeatedly rang out from it told plainly that, whoever ease might have been left at home, the story-tellers at least were out in full force.

President "on the Spot,"

President "on the Spot."

Col. Weir, the president of the association, was here, there and everywhere looking after the comfort of his large ranning, for children the old girls and boys really were again for one brief day, and it taxed the colonel's energies to the utmost to keep them wed in hand.

Among the many reminiscences was one told by a well-known major of a rural regiment, a resident of Toronto, and a memoer of the Paissey Public School staft, just a years ago. Anyone who has ever visited Passey will have noted that the Saugeet kiver divides the village into two almost equal sections. Nor is this division solely geographical. Whatever may be the social and commercial conditions to-day, the fact are supported that the Saugeet Alverts ago the Saugeet files. of anairs when, in 1873, the major was given a position on the rublic School staff at Paisley. He was then, as he is now, an ardent supporter of athietic sports, and the early spring saw a vigorous baseball association organized, with the major as president. The remniscence mentioned above is an incident in the history of that once-famous association, and, altho we cannot give the story in the major's inhinitable style, it runs somewhat like this:

once-famous association, and, altho we cannot give the story in the major's inimitable style, it runs somewhat like this:

A Reminiscence.

In 1873 Pausley was not so thickly settled as it is to-day, and there were "commons" galore on both sides of the river. Early in June of that year the advance agent of Dankie's great show, came to the village and began to negociate for a site, and each section of the Saugern-divided village stroye to outbid the other for the honor or convenience of having the show within its own narrow boundaries. The south side maily trumphed, and the agent signed his contracts and left town. In due time the circus arrived, but the men had no sooner started to erect their tents than they were served with a notice to cease work or pay $25 to a gentleman living on the north side, who owned a vacent lot on the south side, who owned a vacent lot on the south side, were up unusually early that morning, and were "Johnnies-on-the-spot." They advised the showmen to move over to their side of the river and pitch their tents on a large commons that was owned by a w.dow and used only by a pack of baseball "fends."

Over the show went. It due not take the news long to spread, and soon a rap came to the teacher's door that shook it almost off its hinges, and brought the drowsy pedagog to mis senses in double-quick time. The situation was explained to man. As president of the association it was his duty to drive the saow off the baseball grounds, and incidentally back to the south she of the river. That was all very weil for tile president of the association in was his duty to drive the saow off the baseball grounds, and incidentally back to the south she of the river. In a subsequent conversation with the major, it was readily seen that there were other and more potent reasons why the teacher on the night of the circus should have removed everything that might lead to his being taken for the president of the baseball club. There were just as many fakirs accompanying shows in those days as there are now, but neither in equipment nor skill could they compare with the modern fakir. It did not take long for anyone of ordinary intelligence who gave has attention to their methods to discover their secrets. On the above occasion a few of the young men undertook to do the fakirs. step young men undertook to do the fakirs at their own game, and they were so successful that they either broke them, or from their exposures caused them to shut up shop. The president was a young man on that occasion.
