WHAT PROHIBITION DID.

(Toronto Globe.)
In the story of Old Peter, a Globe correspondent gives a practical and illuminating incident of what prohibition is actually doing for many. Peter, who was a devotee of Bacchus, and who is now seventy years of age, is "for the first time engaged in the novel pursuit of caring for his family." For years he lived on the wages his wife obtained as a laundress. Finding it impossible to get

SHOES WILL COST MORE

Still Higher Prices Face Consumers
Labor, Leather and Materials Advancing
Fall Lines to Be Increased Forty Per Cent
Demand for Leather Already Is World-Wide

Serious times face the shoe trade unless some relief comes from an unlooked for source. If things go on as at present, some shoe factories will be obliged to close on account of inability to secure materials for making shoes. The majority of factories have placed orders for leather and more in sight; but how to fill the orders is the problem. Even some of the orders for goods for this present retail season have not been completed for delivery. Under such conditions no guarantee can be given for next season. To further emphasize the industry, the prices of materials are advancing, and leather, both upper and sole stocks have been going beyond record prices with such speed as to make the future of the manufacturing trade very uncertain, unless the manufacturer is supported by a large financial surplus or a strong banking and good credit.

During the past five years the world has lost and destroyed leather and raw materials with an extravagance that would be unwarrantable for the hope that out of the loss by war, may come greater prosperity and improvement through peace. The immense expenditure of leather in military equipment, absolutely necessary, but entirely diverted from any utilitarian purpose. The leather so required and used can never be restored to other purposes.
